133 FILMS BOOKED FOR AHS PUPILS

Audio-Visual Education Complements Routine Course of Study

ATKINSON — Audio-visual education is playing an increasingly important role in the presentation of courses in Atkinson grade and high school, Supt. John Ward has noted.
 This year at least 133 different films have been scheduled to complement course work. Films concern varied subjects—health, geography, social behavior and customs as well as vocational topics.
 Individuals who receive their education before the advent of this form of modern education sometimes tend to regard the films as entertainment features, "but this is far from the truth," Ward says.
 As a matter of fact, according to Superintendent Ward, no film is presented unless class preparation has been made for it. In such preparation the teacher points out what to look for, and briefs students on information to be gained.

After the film has been shown further discussion takes place. Sometimes the movie is shown a second time and a test is given to see how well information has been retained.
 An example of the use of audio-visual education could be found last week in the eighth grade room where students viewed "The ABCD of Health" and "Your Health" as a part of their study unit. After a discussion of the important points students translated their impressions into posters stressing these main points.
 With the exception of students' interest which is high, there is no accurate measuring stick available at Atkinson to determine how effective increasing use of audio-visual education is. But Supt. Ward pointed out that the student used all five senses in this process, and therefore the subject becomes more realistic to him.
 Choosing the material for this phase of the school curriculum is no small task since teachers preview films beforehand, and after it is shown they prepare a written evaluation to be used as a yardstick in choosing future films.
