Disrict Supervisor F. G. Fitz-Roy, of Omaha, will explain the protection this act, as since amended, renders stockmen. Among other Omaha people who plan to attend are Phil Moore, manager of the Journal-Stockman, coln. and market representatives.

Rufus M. Howard will discuss the functioning of the state department of agricul-ture and inspection of which he is director. This state department consists of 11 divisions, and the activity of sev-eral apply to the livestock industry.

Irwin Adamson, chairman of the road committee of the Nebraska Stock Growers association, will discuss with the group the pertinent subject, "Nebras-ka's Road Problems." Mr. Adamson, a prominent Cody rancher, is interested in roads for the ranch country, but has studied the entire highway picture of the state.

An address, the topic of which might seem remote to the Nebraska cattleman, but nevertheless is a matter of world affairs today, will be delivered by Geo. Hartman, a Czechoslovakian refugee, now a student at Hastings college. Son of a prominent lawyer in Prague prior to World War II, Hartman suffered the loss of his parents at the hands of the Germans. He was imprisoned by the Germans and likewise by the Russians when he returned to recoup the family interests after the war. His successful escape to the American zone of Germany and thence to America will be told in his ad-dress entitled, "What It Means to Lose Your Freedom."
