The Korean War

The Korean war became a grim reality to Holt county citizens last week when the draft board announced that 56 selective service registrants from this county would be called during the month of August for pre-induction physical examinations.

To many Americans the war to date has been a nuisance and inconvenience, more than anything else. Some prices have risen and rumors of shortages in the supply of various commodities have been disturbing. Thousands have so far forgotten their essential dignity as human beings as to resort to panic-buying and hoarding of sugar, soap, auto tires, etc.

The Korean war has affected all our lives sufficiently to make us aware that "there is a war on," but when the demands of the military begin leaving gaps in our family circles, then the extremity of the situation begins really to make itself known.

We predict that the American people will buckle down with their characteristic thoroughness and earnestness to the job they have to do, and get it over with all possible dispatch and efficiency. Foreign aggressors are again about to be treated to a demonstration of what that American "get-it-done" spirit can accomplish.

And hoarders, we expect, and any other who detract from the war effort, are going to be far more unpopular during the course of this war than they were last. Adequate plans are reported underway to penalize selfishness and greed as exemplified by hoarding and war profiteering.

To those families who will be called upon to send one or more of their loved ones to actual combat service go our wholehearted understanding and our pledge of help and cooperation.

Before It's Forever Too Late Original Crowd Should Gather for Love Feast

By ROMAINE SAUNDERS

LINCOLN — It is something like 5 years ago that the mother of Mrs. Ruth Rhodes and Ralph Evans was brought to O'Neill for burial beside her husband, the late Wes Evans, the popular hotel man of a fast-fading generation. Recently Ruth was brought here to be buried where her father and mother lie on Prospect Hill.

Not many are left in O'Neill who were here when Ruth was a child with golden hair, the town's most popular little beauty and the envy of many little girls. I saw Ruth last at her mother's funeral and found the charm of childhood had bloomed into womanly graces that the years marching on to life's sunset seemed to accentuate.

And so the onward sweep of time leaves to those who are left only the memory of those who have gone before.

And then we sometimes wonder why the inexorable hand of death is laid upon a splendid citizen like John Melvin and roughnecks and rowdies live on.

I always enjoyed a chat with John when visiting O'Neill.

His little store was a place of friendly contact and customers found John pleasant, helpful and courteous.

He had no aspirations to be classed with "big business" but in an unassuming way gave attention to his small business and with Mrs. Melvin maintained pleasant, unhurried and contented home life.

Maybe before it is forever too late those left of the O'Neill crowd of the long ago should get together and have a love feast.

We had holed up for the night in a small town in the grass country and left early in the morning without eating but had with us some campers' provisions. A few miles out we pulled into the barn yard of an old friend to say hello and move on. Jim came from the barn with a pail of milk and after greetings invited us in to breakfast. We have a lunch with us. I told him, "Lunch hell! You're going to have breakfast with us."

Noting that evolutionists trace their ancestry back to a tribe that hangs by their tails a fundamentalist remarks that they say nothing about those who hung by their necks.

Frontier want ads bring results.

On political and religious fanaticism hangs the shameful guilt of much of the world's turmoil. Pagans have arrayed themselves against other pagans, early Christianity arose out of blood and fire of pagan altars to later become fiends themselves at persecution. Breaking up into groups everyone thought the other fellow was a devil.

Now a great force has arisen ostensibly to crush the republican form of government into the earth, but actually to wipe out the Christian religion.

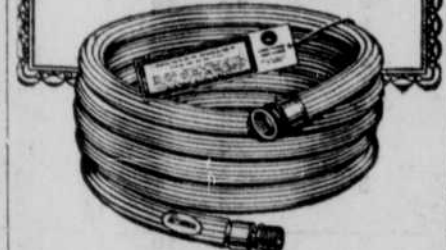

Some hope is seen now for amenity among the some hundreds of religious groups since the movement in recent years to unite. Maybe they will have to do something along that line to present a solid front in conflict with the common enemy.

The term Protestant is a misnomer. If the Protestant church fills its mission it is not protesting but inviting.

The term Catholic is universal only in a limited sense. Catholic and other Christian groups compose less than one-third of the population of the globe.

On the political front partisan jockeying holds up much official action and just about every nation shakes the fist of wickedness at the other fellow. They tell us these are "controversial" subjects.

Maybe there had better be some rag chewing instead of so much shooting.

Statisticians say the young generation is going to live longer, enjoy better health and make the world over. Of 95 Nebraska and Iowa boys given the acid test for military service the other day, only 37 were found mentally and physically fit.

Young men now have their shower bath, shave with an electric razor, eat at cafes, live in steam-heated rooms in winter, have a late model car to whisk them on an errand a block away, work 6 or 8 hours a day for 5 days, have countless contrivances to minimize physical effort and contribute to bodily efficiency.

The tough oldtimer ate corn bread, washed his feet in a bucket, worked 10 or 12 hours a day, never heard of vacation on full pay, sat up nights with a sick neighbor, was always ready to help a friend or stranger, and would knock the block off any gent that got fresh with him; rubbed Sloan's liniment on rheumatic joints and lived to a good old age.
