New Wonder Metal: TITANIUM

If you haven't already read the article about TITANIUM in the October, 1950, issue of The Reader's Digest you should do so right away.

Learn about this remarkable element that already is being used to make beautiful gems . . . the element that today has found its way into our showcases in the form of brilliant rings and ladies' earrings.

A young industrial research scientist discovered this amazingly beautiful gem while working with titanium oxide trying to make white paint whiter. Thus the first really new gem in history was born. It is not an imitation of anything. It is a gem in its own right. Thousands of women today are proudly displaying titanium stones in white, rich blue, orange - brown, red, green and yellow.

Read the story of the new wonder metal—TITANIUM—then ask to see our display.
