SECTIONAL FURNITURE SAVES LIVING SPACE

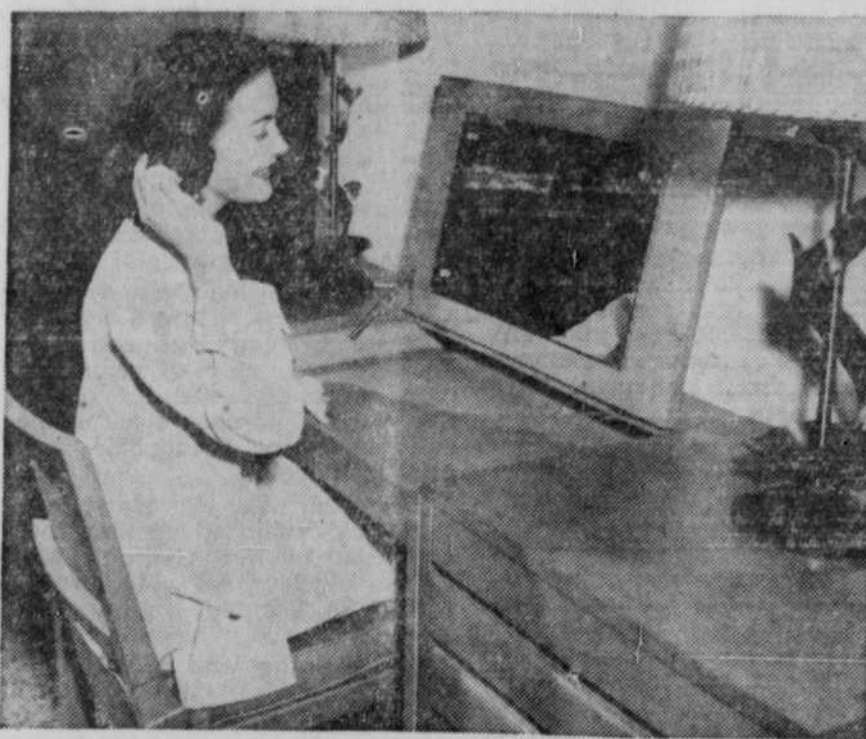

If your living quarters are so crowded that you've begun to think of having enough space in the same way you dream of acquiring a million dollars, here perhaps is an answer to your problem.

Cut down on the amount of furniture you try to jam into your dwelling.

This sounds, on the surface, easier said than done. A certain number of furnishings are essential to daily living, no matter how much you may try to pare your belongings to a minimum.

The answer lies not in elimination, but in combination. By creating furniture that can serve dual purposes, modern designers have made it possible for even one-room apartments to look attractive and uncluttered.

If your living room must serve as your bedroom, too, there's a versatile desk-

Versatile furnishings are the spice of one-room living. This mirrored vanity swings down into desk. L-shaped section of room serves as a bedroom by night and a den by day. All furnishings are white oak with driftwood finish, part of a new 64-piece group by Sligh of Grand Rapids, Mich.

dressing table which may give your home a lift in both efficiency and beauty.

The center section of the desk top lifts up to reveal a mirrored vanity section. When the lid is closed, the clutter of cosmetic needs is tidily concealed.

Another versatile piece is a drop-leaf table with drawers that fill the space, usually wasted, between table top and floor. Here table linens or other items may be conveniently stored.

Flexible seating arrangements are also a good idea for a crowded home or apartment. The trend is away from big, cumbersome divans that consume many precious, hard-to-spare feet. Now sectional pieces are available which may be pushed together to form sofas, or separated to use as individual chairs.

Chambers Pilot 'Fishes' Parcel

CHAMBERS—Duane W. Thorin, aviation chief structural mechanic, aviation pilot, USN, of Chambers, has added the ocean to the mail carrier's creed, while serving aboard the USS Philippine Sea.

With the aid of a helicopter and Chester B. Todd, aviation chief machinist's mate, USN, of St. Paul, Minn., he proved that neither wind, rain, sleet, snow, nor the murky waters off the Korean coast could stop the couriers from their appointed rounds.

An important parcel dropped into the water when a British destroyer was receiving mail from the carrier Leyte. The quick-thinking chiefs jumped into their "windmill" and made off for the rescue.

While Thorin hovered his helicopter over the water, Todd descended by cable to fish out the parcel.

The mail bag was just beyond reach so the Minnesota sailor dove for the sinking pouch, still clinging to the cable. Thorin, in the meantime, kept the "eggbeater" spinning and operated the winch to draw Todd up into the cabin.

Back on board their own carrier, there were comments over the coffee about brass rings from merry-go-rounds and the postman ringing twice.
