it in the dish water, stir up a batch of cookies or cake.

We also invested in a home freezer. Ours is right in the kitchen as it is large. Saves lots of steps, too, only the fan does make quite a noise when running. Our garden wasn't too good last summer but did get quite a bit in it. Our sweet corn was good and did put a lot of it in. Tried 2 containers with the ear and all an dit tasted most as good as picking it from the field.

We even had fresh cucumbers last Sunday for dinner which otherwise would have been thrown away last summer. They were good so will try more this year if I raise any. The only fresh fruit I tried was strawberries as I had the jars anyway so other fruits I canned. They are so much easier to can than vegetables, anyway. I believe I like the green beans better canned than frozen but someone told me if they are cooked about half done first they would be better, so will try it that way. There are 7 in our family and we got the large size freezer which is none too big with one's meats, so when buying don't get too small a size.

Once in a while I get a baking seige — bake bread, rolls, cake, cookies, then wrap the extra and put into the deep freeze.
