Out of Old Nebraska... Sioux Impressed by Military Might

During the 1840's, with the number of overland emigrants swelling each year, the federal government was besieged with demands for protection from the Indians along the trail. One means by which the government furnished that protection was to send troops over the trail to confer with the Indians and to impress them with the military might of the Great White Father.

Such an expedition was led across Nebraska in the summer of 1845 by Col. Stephen Watts Kearny, who with 250 men traveled from Ft. Leavenworth to South Pass and back again in the 99 days from May 18 to August 24. They went out along the Oregon Trail to South Pass, retraced their steps to Ft. Laramie, then cut over to the South Platte, returning to Ft. Leavenworth along the valley of the Arkansas and over the Santa Fe trail.

Colonel Kearny's soldiers were well armed, and had 2 howitzers with them. Their guide was the intrepid mountain man, Thomas Fitzpatrick. Their mission was to cultivate peace with the Indians, while at the same time impressing upon them the danger of molesting the emigrants.

Kearny felt that his expedition was successful. He reported that the Indians "were distinctly told that the road... must not be closed... and that the white people traveling upon it must not be disturbed, either in their persons or property."

The howitzers, discharged for the benefit and amazement of the Indian, appear to have had a particularly salutary effect. Apparently the men's uniforms and fine horses had the same desirable effect.

At Ft. Laramie (then a fur trading post rather than a military establishment) Colonel Kearny held a council with the Sioux. He told the thousand Indians assembled on the Laramie plain that he had come to open a road to the waters of the setting sun and that Indians who disturbed the emigrants would be subject to swift punishment. He particularly warned the Sioux against whisky, stating that it was the greatest enemy among them.

Bull Tail, the principal chief present, promised obedience, after which Colonel Kearny distributed presents. Three shots from the howitzers echoed down the Laramie valley and the council was over.

Colonel Kearny was much impressed by the size of the emigration. By the time he reached South Pass he had overtaken about 850 men, 475 women, 1,000 children, 7,000 cattle, 400 horses and mules and 460 wagons.
