And they did not shoot. It was in the darkest hour of the 1860's when the Confederate army led by Stonewall Jackson swept north through Virginia into Maryland that an old patriot looked out of a window waving the stars and stripes. The poet has her say, "Shoot, if you must, this old gray head, but spare your country's flag!" Stonewall Jackson, who had faced belching canon and walls of bayonets, quavered at such a sight. "Halt! The dust-brown ranks stood fast." A bit of cloth, the emblem of a people. Insult the flag at the peril of your life, at the risk of setting the world aflame with bursting bombs and roaring guns.

The auditorium, the galleries, the vestries, were crowded to the limit. The first words of the speaker jarred us into attention, "I have returned a frightened man from months of travel a-round the world." Saluting the stars and stripes at his right hand, he unfurled a red flag and said its shadow lay upon a billion of earth's people.

"Americans know nothing of what is on the other side of the

And then in vivid outlines and blood freezing detail he painted the picture as only a gifted orator could paint it. Everywhere the speaker went, among Moslems, Buddhists, Hindus and other Oriental faiths he found an implement iental faiths he found an implacable hatred of Americans and Christianity. Everywhere is the red flag of communism and everywhere he saw banners reading, "Americans, go home. We don't want your Christian religion." Asia's estimate of Christianity is in terms of bombs and belching guns Is that the footprint some emisaries of the Cross have left across the earth?

The speaker brought to his hearers much information that does not get into the newspapers. The Voice of America telling of industrial, social and living conditions in the United States is vio-lently resented and does more harm than good, the speaker said. In South Korea, where we are supposed to be the agents of free-dom and deliverance, banners are displayed, Americans get out; you have ruined our country. The only Americans getting out are the blood - stained and broken bodies of the sons of fathers and mothers in Nebraska and every other state.

At a householder's home today I saw trees laden with ripening pears when I lingered in passing for a visit with the patriot living there, then out on his lawn uprooting grass growing among the clover. I said to him, "Let it grow, You are taking out the grass God put on Nebraska prairieland and encouraging an imported plant to take over." Prairie grass, if let alone, will run out objectionable plant growth as well as grass not native to this region. Summer floral display puts on its gayest colors as autumn approaches, but we often slight the violets till the lovely flowers are gone, nor prize the music till the sweetvoiced bird has flown.
