Will Valdemar Accede to Draft Or Will He Oppose Senator Butler?

LINCOLN—This was a week of decision for F. Valdemar Peterson.

The dome-like forehead of Nebraska's governor has been wrinkled in thought the past several days as he pondered his political future.

Should he accede to the "draft" movement launched by the leaders of the Republican party in Nebraska and become a candidate for the Third District congressional seat, succeeding the late Rep. Karl Stefan?

Or should he go through with his plan to challenge the reelection bid of Omaha's white-haired Sen. Hugh Butler?

Tough Choice—

It was a difficult decision. To give in to the party draft, thus avoiding the showdown with Butler which the party leadership dreads, would mean the sacrifice of Peterson's political ambitions.

As a senator—if he worked hard at it—he could be a real influence. He has demonstrated considerable talent in that direction. As a member of the house of representatives, he would probably be lost in the mob of 435, without prestige, without the all-important seniority.

On the other hand, there's no assurance he could beat Butler. The governor's supporters are frank to admit that about all they would have to shoot at is the 73-year-old senator's health.

He has been hospitalized lately for treatment of what he said was a recurrence of a football knee injury but the Peterson people hint darkly that it was something far more serious.

No Choice—

The hardened people in the party maintained the governor could stop worrying; he had no choice. "We've got him sewed up," said one young wheelhorse. He didn't sound happy about it.

"If he doesn't play ball with us," said the "practical" politician, "it'll be suicide."

Whether he plays ball or not, even the governor would admit he hadn't much time. It's less than 2 weeks till the 21 members of the Republican state central committee who live in the Third District meet in Columbus to name their man.

At week's end, Peterson was still undecided.

Bad Choice—

At least one group of men thought that the backers of the draft-Peterson move might have outsmarted themselves. A group of Lincoln businessmen, who had as their spokesman Attorney J. Lee Rankin, said the GOP leadership had made a bad choice.

"We're opposed to making deals to trade public offices within the party," Rankin said. The lawyer said he had contacted GOP members outstate and had found their reaction to his stop-the-draft proposal "better than I expected."

Because it appeared to be their last chance to "get out of the box," Peterson's friends were relying heavily on Rankin's efforts. But it was a pretty long shot.

Good Choice—

While the Peterson affair occupied the center ring of Nebraska politics, there was some lesser action.

State Sen. Hugh Carson, of Ord, who is the third man in the race for the Republican nomination for governor, appeared to have made a good choice in timing his demand for a special session of the legislature to raise the ceiling on old age assistance payments.

While his opponents, Robert Crosby, of North Platte, and Victor Anderson, of Lincoln, have been busy conducting orthodox, GOP-type campaigns, Carson has been the maverick.

shotgunning his criticism at Peterson's administration generally, but keeping his pattern pretty well aimed at the state highway department, always fair political game and generally unpopular with the farmers.

This week, Carson lined up his sights on the city voters and fired a blast in favor of a hike in the old age grants. He told the governor he was proud that he had voted for a $10 increase in the maximum payment, now set at $55.

Peterson declined to comment on Carson's letter, but an aide sneered, "You know what this is, p-o-l-i-t-i-c-s."
