State Capitol News

and the new one is given a good chance of escaping the axing handed LB 455 of the last session by the public works committee.

Even opponents of LB 455 congratulated Sen. John P. McKnight and his legislative council committee for the work they have done on drafting a new and similar bill. The sample bill was up for public hearing at the capitol.

Summarizing the testimony, McKnight noted that no one appeared to protest the objectives of the bill and that the only criticism was of minor details.

The ironic part of this is that those who assailed LB 455 most bitterly harped on the fact that it was too long and contained powers that were too broad and sweeping. Now, some of these same people are complaining that the new bill is not specific enough to outline those powers.

Voc Ag — The state board of vocational education is taking a second look at its requirements for eligibility under the vocational agriculture program. At present persons who do not reside on a farm are ineligible.

Gov. Val Peterson, chairman of the board, called this ruling "outdated." There is no reason that a man living in town can't be just as good a farmer, or better, than one living on a farm, said the governor. "Where he sleeps doesn't make any difference."

The board is expecting to change the ruling in its contracts for next year.

Governor Peterson also urged the board to call a meeting at the Milford trade school for the purpose of deciding the fate of the school. Board members agreed that the school is likely to come again under the legislative attack which led to Sen. George Syas' introduction of a bill to close the school.

Hot Water — Gov. Val Peterson, who makes better headlines with his spur-of-the-moment remarks than with prepared snipits, has found himself in a little hot water so far as Nebraska lawyers are concerned. The governor took the bar to task recently for allowing persons to appear in court without counsel. He said he thought it is "disgraceful that courts in this state can pass judgement on men without counsel."

The remark was made during a pardon board hearing on a man who had pleaded guilty but later said he was innocent.

The governor's comment went over like a lead balloon with the legal profession. One prominent Lincoln judge suggested that the governor might consider that any district court in the state would disqualify a lawyer who offered his services to an attorney-less client. This, said the jurist, violates a basic canon of the legal profession which prohibits solicitation of cases.
