

—The Frontier Photo &amp; Engraving

It was a battle of men and machines against the mighty Missouri at Decatur where a hastily built dike was preventing ruin of hundreds of farms and possibly was the reason water was kept out of Tekamah, normally five miles from the river. Alfred Ferguson, of Decatur (left), Paul Dalrymple, of Lyons (center), and Willis Newell, of Lyons, were manning this D-8 "cat" about 10 o'clock Sunday night. Waves were lapping at top of dike. A sudden break might have claimed several lives because the 'dozers had dug a spillway behind the dike in moving up mud. Corncribbing and straw were used with mud. This "homemade" dike held.

Ronnie Williams (left) had just been evacuated from his 160-acre bottomland farm near Decatur when The Frontier snapped this photo. Water was two feet deep in his house. Williams had returned from the Veterans hospital to walk into this mess. He is a nephew of Inman's Postmaster James McMahan. Others in photo are Williams' father-in-law, Willard Moll, and Gordon Locker.
