Carpenter, Bridenbaugh Proposals Make Bedfellows of State GOP, Demo Bigwigs

LINCOLN—A lobby loafer at the Cornhusker hotel here last week might well have wondered whether his eyes were deceiving him.

It was a strange sight to see the bigwigs of both the republican and democratic parties pumping hands with each other but the explanation was simple: They were joining forces against a pair of common foes. The enemy in this case was a couple of bills their sponsors say would give the average voter a bigger voice in party affairs and consequently, a bigger voice in naming the men who will serve in public office.

The bills, Sen. Carpenter's LB 208 to provide for the election of national committeemen at primary elections and Sen. Hal Bridenbaugh's LB 260 to reform the naming of delegates to national political conventions, were heard by the government committee which took no immediate action. The hearing was one of the liveliest of the session and was climaxed by Senator Carpenter's heated assertion that if his bill is passed, he'll run for republican national committeeman and "beat the pants off" the party regulars who have won the job since it has been filled at party conventions.

The flamboyant Scottbluff senator called State GOP Chairman David T. Martin and National Committeeman Abel V. Shotwell "a bunch of political cowards" who are afraid to "take your case to the people."

Martin had dismissed the bill as one "introduced at the behest of a handful of men (he called them Johnny-come-latelies) whose personal ambitions have overshadowed their judgment."

Joining forces with the two GOP leaders were Democratic National Committeeman Bernard J. Boyle and National Committeewoman Mary Cunningham. Edna Donald of Grand Island, the GOP committeewoman, got into the act, too.

All of them said that since the committeeman's job pays no salary or expenses, few qualified men would seek the post since it would cost thousands to stage a statewide campaign.

Carpenter scoffed at this and suggested the post had been quite profitable to Arthur Mulien, a former democratic committeeman.

The Bridenbaugh bill encountered opposition from a pair of longtime GOP wheelhorses, Sam Reynolds and Charles Reed, both of Omaha and both members of Nebraska's delegation to Chicago, Ill., last summer.

The bill proposes that delegates be identified on the ballot with the presidential candidate they support. The delegates would be apportioned according to the votes received by their candidates. If presidential candidate number 1 got half the votes and numbers 2 and 3 split the other half equally, the delegation would be made up of half number 1's supporters and a quarter each to the other two.

Reynolds who ran as a Taft delegate last spring and who voted for the Ohio senator even after it became obvious that Eisenhower had won the nomination, called the Bridenbaugh proposal "not the American way." He said delegates would be nothing more than errand boys who might as well stay home and write a letter.

The bill provides that delegates would be bound to their candidate until he began losing strength or until he released them.

Reed argued that a state's trading position would be jeopardized if the whole convention knew exactly how the Nebraskans would vote.

Neither man said anything about giving meaning to the vote Nebraskans cast in the presidential primary.

Redistricting—Nebraska's lagging school redistricting program may get a shot in the arm, but probably not before 1955. Three senators—Marvel of Hastings, Cramer of Albion and Duis of Gothenburg—introduced a resolution at week's end calling for a legislative council study of the problem between now and the next session of the legislature.

Observers took this to mean that this session of the legislature is not likely to do much about redistricting.

The education committee, of which Marvel and Cramer are members, last week heard two bills aimed at promoting reorganization but it took no action.

One of the bills, introduced at the request of Gov. Crosby, would allow rural elementary school districts to contract with other districts for instruction for two consecutive years only.

Crosby told the committee contracting is retarding consolidation of districts because "it comes to be a financial advantage for the school contracting pupils out."

State Supt. F. B. Decker pointed out that almost 1,800 districts are contracting their pupils out and said "the mill levy of the contracting district is considerably below the operating district's levy."

The bill drew opposition from Alfred Gabelman, representing the Rural School Board association. He said rural districts would reopen their own schools rather than consolidate if contracting is abolished.

George Collins of Atkinson said 32 districts in his county are contracting because they cannot get teachers.

The other measure, by Senator Cramer, would set up a county school board under a county board of education. He said the county board would replace the present county reorganization committees and further redistricting work.

This bill drew strong opposition from the Farm Bureau Federation, whose representative, Russell Lockwood of Lincoln, said it contemplates a "compulsory county unit system." He said his organization would not oppose an optional system.

Bingo—The local option bingo bill moved a step closer to passage last week although its sponsor, Senator Carpenter, had to steer it through some troubled waters.

The measure was advanced by voice vote after the lawmakers tied themselves into knots to avoid a roll call vote which would have put them on record.

The know-it-alls think that if the bill fails, it'll be because it won't be able to muster enough votes on final passage where each individual vote must be recorded. Because of the strong opposition to the measure from church groups and others, most senators are going to be pretty unwilling to say publicly that they're for the bill.

Constitution—There's nothing wrong with the Nebraska constitution that a few amendments won't fix, the legislature decided last week, in voting to uphold Sen. Bridenbaugh's motion to kill a bill which would have put the issue of calling a constitutional convention on the ballot in 1954.

Sen. Carpenter said the trouble with the document, last given a general working over in 1920, is that it's "static" and not flexible enough to meet today's conditions.

The vote for Bridenbaugh's motion was 27 to 15.

Watersheds—The legislature is nearing the end of public hearings on bills. This is one of the few state law-making bodies which holds a hearing on every bill introduced and some members wonder out loud why they subject themselves to such torture.

Though they're not willing to allow the use of their names, some senators have said they grow mighty weary of seeing the same lobbyists appear on bill after bill with the same comments.

The fare for the rest of this week is meager. The revenue committee today (Thursday) will hear a bill prohibiting the sale of cigarettes below cost and one providing a procedure for determining value of stock shares in domestic corporations. On Friday, too, only one committee will be in action. The government committee will hear bills to abolish the State Liquor commission and to place on the next general election ballot two constitutional amendments affecting state officers.
