Mizzou Bridge Being Moved

The Guy H. James Construction company of Oklahoma City, Okla., and the Foster-Smetana company of Omaha have assembled much of the equipment and supplies at the site of the Wheeler, S.D., Missouri river bridge in preparation for dismantling and moving the bridge.

The north approach to the structure has been partially removed to make way for an access road to the river's edge under the bridge, where huge pontoon barges are being assembled in the channel. These barges will be used to transport the bridge up the river to Chamberlain one span at a time. In its new location it will be joined to the west end of the Chamberlain highway bridge to span the Ft. Randall reservoir at that point for South Dakota highway 16.

Each of the spans measures 336 feet in length and weighs several hundred tons. It is expected that the water level of the reservoir, at present several feet above normal river stage, will be raised to allow passage of the barges up the channel.

The contract cost of moving the bridge is about $1,285,832. When constructed in 1925 the bridge cost three hundred thousand dollars.

Letters to Editor

Inman, Nebr.
Are you going to buy a horse? A lot of folks are, and many are just a bit doubtful of their ability to correctly appraise the best.

The purpose of these articles is to give the novice at least a working knowledge of horse judging.

When you go to a dealer or farmer to look at a horse, have him paraded hitched or under the saddle depending on what you want the horse to do. See if he moves out freely, reins in quietly and turns readily in obedience to pressure on the reins. Then have someone lead him first at the walk then the trot. The man showing the horse must be on foot to do this. Have the horse led straight away for a few rods then turned sharply around and led directly back to you.

Here are the things to look for as he goes away: He should show you the bottom of each hoof as he picks up the foot, and the foot should move straight forward, and definitely should not swing either in toward the opposite leg or wing outward as the ankle flexes and the foot is carried forward. Then watch as he is turned back toward you.

Never buy a horse that displays any awkwardness in turning. He may fall when carrying a rider. Then note if there are any marks on the inside of the lower legs which might be caused by interfering or clipping of the leg by the hoof on the opposite foot.

A horse which interferes is never satisfactory either in harness or as a riding horse. You should also buy a horse gaited for the work you want him to do. Never buy a fancy gaited horse to work stock. They turn so clumsily that it is dangerous to ride them in sorting cattle or other fast close work. The horse that walks, trots and gallops and displays steadiness and "cow sense" with plenty of speed has the proper equipment for the stock horse. Leave the four and five-gaited ponies to the park riders and showmen. They are more comfortable to ride but cannot endure much hard riding and are not practical for ranch work.

—CAL GEARY

Mr. and Mrs. William Gallagher entertained at a card party Sunday evening. Those present were Mr. and Mrs. Pat Fetrow, Mr. and Mrs. Leroy Baumeister, Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Bazelman and Orin Long. A late lunch was served.

Returned China Missionary Coming

First Presbyterian church of O'Neill will be host Sunday to a Presbytery-wide youth rally and Presbytery meeting. The principal speaker of the rally will be Mrs. Elleroy Smith of Omaha.

Mrs. Smith and her late husband were missionaries to China, having spent more than 33 years there in the mission work. She and her husband were interned by the Japanese and lived more than a year under the communist regime.

On Monday, Mrs. Smith and Rev. Robert Buzza, field directors of Christian education in the synod of El
