Prairieland Talk . . .

Not Spying, Just Nostalgia

Retired, Former Editor, The Frontier

LINCOLN-During a recent visit to O'Neill Prairieland Talker was indebted to M. H. Horiskey for the pleasure of a visit to the scene of air force operations. Entrance to the grounds flaunts a warning to keep out but two guys who had prior claim to the open prairie as they had been homestead kids out that way disregarded the "no admittance" sign and Mike drove in.

A pleasant guy in a pickup came to meet us and when he saw that we were neither red spies nor potential brigands we were not placed under arrest and after at least silently wishing heaven's blessing and that no further tragedy would overtake the undertaking, we drove to another section of the J. B. Ryan estate, crawled through a fourwire fence and set foot once more upon the spot made sacred to memory where my father and mother in the long ago braved the vicissitudes of frontier life and established their home.

ument to the dreams of a courageous soul.

A long and somewhat tiresome bus ride returning from O'Neill last week was brightened by. the unanticipated glow when Miss Helen Hagensick, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Hagensick, boarded the ous and became a fellow passenger to the end of the journey, after two bus changes and one-half hour in the hot sun by the side of the highway while the bus driver summoned help and replaced a wheel that had gone flat. Miss Hagensick was returning to Lincoln after a week spent with her parents. She is engaged in the important work of teaching and will teach this year in the commercial department of Lincoln high. She and her brother, Elmer, who is taking dentistry at the university, have taken summer school work and maintain an apartment on North Thirteenth street. In addition to Miss Hagensick's work in the high school, she teaches classes two nights a week at the university. She is one of a group of teachers who leave Sunday for Chicago, Ill., where they will be guests at the Northwestern university at a teachers' lecture period. Another charming lady, a native of O'Neill who has met life's problems in the same spirit that actuated the patriots that put O'Neill on the map.

A funeral director-believe that's what the last legislature determined they should be known as-says their firm is being called upon from time to time to bury one of the foreigners accounted for as a "displaced person" and who accounted for as a "displaced person" and who had died. Friends and relatives of the dead from the same European country make an affair of the funeral, all join in singing at the grave, go through with certain rites and insist on filling the grave after the casket is lowered.

Prairieland Talker is a native American born of native Americans who pioneered a spot on Nebraska prairies that had known only the hoof-beat of buffalo and antelope and the foot-print of beaded moccasin. With this background there is cause for resentment over the outbursts of any endeavoring to belittle the work of the senate committee dealing with disloyal citizens

Nothing those brought before the committee after investigation by the FBI might say would be so convincing of connection with the red scourge as the insulting, arrogant attitude of some the committee has to deal wih. A simple denial of John A. Harmon, clerk court; any sympathy for the communist movement with Will Purdy of Inman, sheriff; R. E. Slaymaker of Stuart, superincourteous consideration of the work of the committee is accepted as sufficient to establish tendent; W. B. Cooper of Chamloyalty of the one questioned to American institutions, while those who refuse to answer questions as to connection with the communists, defy federal authority and sneer over the processes of our government, leave the witness stand under a shadow of suspicion, go about their affairs enjoying the blessings vouchsafed in a free country Inman, superintendent; they scheme to destroy.

And the critics of Senator McCarthy's activities to hunt down disloyal citizens place themselves under a shadow of suspicion.

Knowing little or nothing of the farm price support program, I see where farm representatives of New England are for cutting the support props. come in contact with a few farmers. They are fat if not sassy. Drive the latest makes of cars, dress in style, live in modern homes lighted by electricity and heated by oil heating plants, will not milk a cow but buy butter and milk, buy more land, complain about high taxes, have tractors and all the modern machines. And I recall, too, before the era of youth movements, panel discussions, dog shows and government price supports and men had whiskers, if a patriot had a hundred dollar span of horses and a 15-dollar breaking plow he was a farmer. And somehow those fellows made a go of it, sent no delegations to the statehouse or on to Washington. Of course it's nice to know that when you raise a pumpkin Uncle Sam is on hand with the "price support," but those who have known what life was like when prices were determined by supply and demand also know there is very little difference on the score of human happiness from one generation to another.

Think you know something about raising a head of cabbage, a red ripe tomato or an ear of Stowel's Evergreen? Go to Bob Schulz's back yard on Everett street between Fourth and Fifth and take a look. I did that in company with a friend while in O'Neill recently and the look was prolonged to an admiring inspection of what must be the nearest approach to mankinds first garden of which we read in Holy Writ. Mr. Schulz explains to visitors that he prepares the ground for planting by spading that somewhat extensive back yard and supplying fertilizer, when the planting is done apparently on geometrical design. There is about everything but watermelons in the garden but Mr. Schulz explains the absence of these on the basis of his kindly consideration of the youth of the community, not wanting to encourage the practice of raids on melon patches. He learned the art of garden raising in Florida and says the soil in O'Neill is especially adapted for the growth of vegetables. And the back yard at the Schulz home produces in a season fresh garden products to the value of $600.

Washington, D.C., newspapers had halfcolumn stories of the air force helicopter crash near O'Neill that killed the German scientist, Dr. Guenter Loeser, and five others. Many undertakings that have marked the beginning of scientific discovery have been clouded with tragedy. The Washington newspaper account has it that the 14-year-old son of Doctor Loeser was at the testing grounds when his father was killed. The Frontier had the full gruesome details and pictures.

Editorial . . . Ord Globe-Trotter Sums It Up

(Editor's note: The following editorial was written by Publisher James M. Cornwell of the Stanton Register and was published last week. The article concerns the observations of E. L. Vogeltanz, prominent Ord attorney, who recently returned from an extensive tour of Europe. While The Frontier does not fully agree with some of the sweeping generalities and indictments, we have considerable respect for Mr. Vogeltanz's observations and for that reason we are reprinting the Register article.)

The Marshall plan may have been timely and beneficial at its beginning. But it has outgrown its usefulness without accomplishing its purpose!

That's the opinion of our father-in-law, E. L. Vegeltanz of Ord. He returned last week from a two-month tour of Europe. An observant man who visits a great deal with natives of the area he is in, we believe he has straight dope.

Germany, particularly, incurred Mr. Vogeltanz's wrath. He insists there is no sign of poverty, starvation or degradation-no appearance of war's desolation, left there. Further-and this is an important point, he says: "Communism could never take over Germany." He means, of course, the reds could control German actions, but never German opinions.

The overall reaction after visiting England, Holland, Beglium, Germany, Switzerland, Italy and France was simply this: "We have bought nothing with our billions spent in Europe. We may have helped those nations to rebuild after their war damages, but we do not have their friendship or their respect."

A military leader whose name will not be used for obvious reasons, told Mr. Vogeltanz that Germany would be back to its former stature within 15 years-and ready, as ever, to involve the world in another war!

There is "tremendous building activity" in Germany. Mr. Vogeltanz believes it overshadows any boom-area in this nation. He is an extensive traveler hence his opinion is no groundless one. This building is being done with money from our nation. Our military bases in Germany are luxurious beyond anything in World War II. Officer's clubs which rival mansions are not the exception but the rule.

Germany has not changed, he believes. It was yesterday and is today a nation devoted entirely to Germany, with prevalent "to hell with the world" feeling.

ing hatred of the United States. Its people have proclaimed Mussolini a national hero whose only mistake was entering World War II. Despite billions of American dollars for aid-purposes, the people distrust Americans and dislike those things which reflect American aid.

France, peopled by a "lazy, dishonest, tricky" race, is interested only in grabbing every possible dollar from the United States whether it comes through Marshall plan aid or the tourist pocket. The French, a spineless people, would bow to communism tomorrow as quickly as they bowed to naziism in 1939, he feels, despite our billions spent to halt the onward march of the communists.

England, a downtrodden third-rate power burdened by heavy taxation and a sad experience with socalistic government, is not an ally of power in Europe. The British are "soured on the world," unhappy with their lot and envious of American prestige

All in all, Mr. Vogeltanz believes this nation has poured its money into Europe in an effort to be a "big brother" to those countries and has failed miserably. We are generally disliked except by those who have become rich from Marshall plan money. We have not sold democracy. We have not, in fact, gotten anywhere near the results we might have expected from our tremendous investment. As a result, the defeat of communism in Europe is no nearer today than it was in 1945.

What a sad commentary on the situation we've sought to alleviate at the expense of sending abroad the dollars we might have used to improve our own naton. We certainly have not prove our own nation. We certainly have not averted another war - we've only postponed it playing it would seem, into the very scheme of communist aggression.

Belgium, Mr. Vogeltanz believes, has made the major recovery from World War II. Its people have gained maximum benefit from their aidmoney. Its government, somewhat labor minded, has encouraged and financed building. The nation is in good financial condition and could exist without further help.
