White House Signal to Start Randall Power

A telephonic signal from the white house in Washington, D.C., will start the first power surging on the line from the nearly-completed Ft. Randall dam to Missouri basin consumers in a dedication ceremony to be held shortly after March 15.

Brig-Gen. W. E. Potter, Missouri river division engineer for corps of engineers, said he had advised Gov. Sigurd Anderson of South Dakota that the first of the eight 40,000-kilowatt units of the Ft. Randall power plant could be placed in operation any time after March 15.

The South Dakota governor has announced that President Eisenhower has consented to participate in the dedication ceremony from the white house by means of a direct telephone line to the powerhouse.

Plans for the dedication ceremony are being coordinated by Governor Anderson's office, with the cooperation of corps personnel. The specific date for the ceremony, which is expected to be announced soon, will permit ample time for extensive tests of the final tie-in with power transmission lines of the bureau of reclamation.

Because of winter weather and the limited space available in the powerhouse, the government plans to limit invitations to about one hundred persons.

General Potter cited the initial generation of power at Ft. Randall as a construction milestone in the comprehensive Missouri basin river development program. He paid tribute to the harmonious working relations existing between the corps and contractors, suppliers and labor leaders, in overcoming difficulties arising from shortages of labor, supplies and critical materials during the Korean war period.

The Ft. Randall dam, a corps of engineers multiple purpose project, has been under construction since 1946. It is a major unit in the authorized comprehensive program of river development in the Missouri basin. Now 75 percent completed, this project is planned to have an ultimate total power installation of 320,000 kilowatts when all eight power units are completed. Additional units will come on the line at three or four-month intervals. The dam itself will be essentially completed by the close of 1954. Work now under contract will complete the spillway and powerhouse, and bring the earth-fill dam up to the full 160-foot crest elevation.

Storage of water in the reservoir began last spring and at present nearly 1,400,000 acre feet of water is impounded above the dam, creating the largest body of water in South Dakota.

When in full operation the reservoir will extend 150 miles upstream, with a maximum controlled storage of 6,300,000 acre-feet.

In addition to performing an important flood control function and producing a large block of hydro-power, the project will be operated to conserve and regulate flows in the Missouri river in the interests of navigation, municipal water supply and sanitation, and fish and wildlife conservation. The clear-water lake is expected to attract thousands of tourists, vacationists and others who enjoy fishing, boating, swimming and other recreational benefits of a large body of water.

Power generated at the Ft. Randall power plant will be transmitted to customers over power lines built and operated by the bureau of reclamation.

Visitors Here— Mr. and Mrs. Claude Kindall of Pierce were weekend guests of Mr. and Mrs. Don Clyde.

Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Rouse and son called on Mrs. Carrie Borg and Marvel Friday.
