"Can you find my wife?"

You couldn't blame Sergeant Byrd for being excited. After weeks in an overseas hospital, he'd just arrived in the U.S. Now, he was trying to reach his wife by telephone.

"Can you find a Mrs. James Byrd in West River? She's staying with friends... thirteen-something Oak Street. I think."

Long Distance Operator Frances Green listened sympathetically to the eager voice. "I'll do my best," she said.

Quickly, Mrs. Green called West River police, explained the situation. Anxious to help, a squad car of men soon canvassed Oak Street, located Mrs. Byrd in the second block. While they waited, the young wife rushed to the telephone. Quietly they left, as they heard her cry, "Oh, Jimmy—you're really back!"

The story above is true, although names have been changed to protect the privacy of the people involved. Quick-thinking Operator Green might be working in your area—for this incident is but one example of the value of telephone service, and the helpfulness of telephone men and women.

To attract and hold people like Frances Green who will continue to serve you well, your telephone company must be in sound financial health. Good telephone service—both local and long distance—is important to you and is worth much more than it costs.
