Curtains Drab, Tired-Looking? Dye 'em

Why scowl at faded curtains? A quick dye-job in washing machine will give them fresh, new Spring look.

Curtain colors take an awful beating from the sun. But that's no reason for getting yourself into a blue funk. A fast dip in a home dyebath will give your curtains new color-life, another season's wear. Tinting curtains is inexpensive and surprisingly easy, especially if you let your washer do the job for you. The same is true, of course, for drapes, bedspreads, sheets, slip covers and other home furnishings that could benefit from a Spring color tonic.

Your color choice is endless. All-fabric dyes come in over 50 true colors and you can mix these to get many others. In addition, one maker offers special all-fabric curtain dyes in the popular ecru and peach colors.

If your curtains are unevenly faded or spotted, as often happens, the Tintex Home Economics Bureau suggests use of color remover first. This will prepare the fabric for uniform penetration of the dye. The washer, however, is not recommended by the bureau for taking out old color, since the large amount of water in the machine weakens the action of the color remover. Instead, use a regular vessel large enough to completely submerge the curtain in the solution.

The automatic washer is ideal for the dyeing operation, on the other hand. Pour the dye in a quart container of hot water and stir until dissolved. After washing the curtains thoroughly, fill the machine with very hot water and pour the dye solution into it. Let the machine do the rest, right through the rinsing and drying phases. Thus, new-looking curtains, after ironing, are yours for the trifling cost of the dyes.
