

'Centennial Car' Coming Saturday

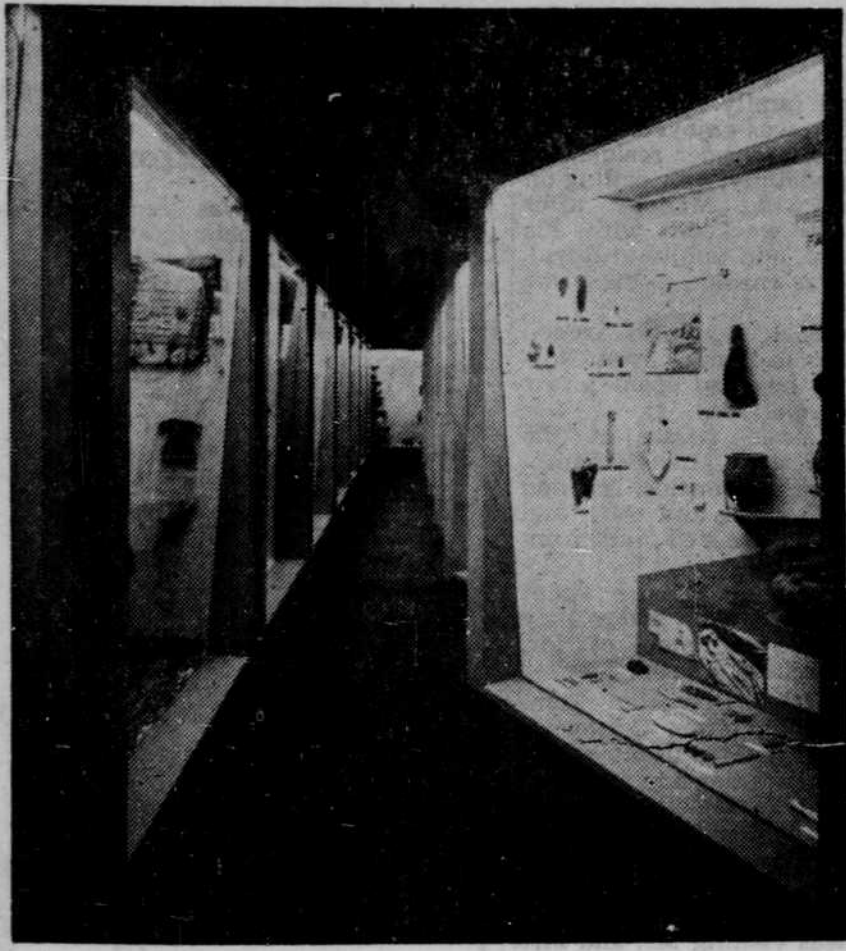

Nebraska's "centennial car," a traveling museum containing an exhibit of life in Nebraska from the earliest Indian hunters of ten thousand and more years ago to the present, will be at the Chicago & North Western station in O'Neill Saturday September 18. The car will be open to the public free of charge from 12 until 6 o'clock.

Launched at Lincoln on June 9 by Gov. Robert Crosby, officials of the state's railroads, and members of the Territorial Centennial commission, the car will visit all parts of Nebraska during the summer, concluding its tour in September.

"The centennial car" is the Union Pacific's air-conditioned exhibit car which has been transformed into a traveling museum of the latest design, with exhibits installed by the museum staff of the Nebraska State Historical society.

Included in the displays are many treasures from the State Historical society's museum, showing the life of the early Indians, the fur traders, the territorial pioneers and modern Nebraskans.

Other displays will show the development of transportation, the history of Omaha—the territorial capital, life on the sod house frontier, and the development of agriculture.

The entire cost of modifying and transporting the car is being borne by the railroads serving Nebraska as part of their contribution to the territorial centennial. Participating railroads are the Burlington, Chicago & North Western, Missouri Pacific, Rock Island and Union Pacific.

In announcing the car, James E. Lawrence of Lincoln, chairman of the Territorial Centennial commission, expressed the hope that all Nebraskans would avail themselves of the opportunity it provides to view significant exhibits relating to Nebraska's history. He pointed out that it would provide a particularly good opportunity for those who had not yet been able to visit the new building of the State Historical society in Lincoln.

The car will arrive here from Ainsworth and will move on from there to Neligh.

Whooping Cranes Vanishing Breed

Last 24 Birds to Visit State

The state will have some distinguished visitors here during the latter part of September or early October and authorities have asked Nebraska citizens not to shoot at them.

The not-too-strange "don't shoot" request is made to protect the lives of 24 whooping cranes, the world's last remaining flock, expected to stop off here enroute from the northern wilds of Canada, where they spent the summer to their winter quarters along the Gulf of Mexico.

The birds are expected to stay in Nebraska for two or three weeks, depending on the weather. Carl H. Peterson, legal counsel for the Nebraska state game, forestation and parks commission, said the whooping cranes usually spend their time in Nebraska in the area between Grand Island and Gothenburg.

Peterson said the birds stand about four feet high, are white in adult plumage with black wing tips. In flight, the birds trail their long legs out behind instead of folding them up under them. "The whooping crane has a pink edge to the base of his bill," Peterson said, "and it looks like he's been eating jelly."

Last April, the National Audubon society reported, 24 birds, three more than the year before, made the long journey to the Canadian wilds and disappeared beyond the 60th parallel.

Colored Slides Are Shown to Audience

EWING—"By Life or By Death," a sequence of 82 colored slides depicting the life of John and Betty Stam, accompanied by a recorded narration, was presented by Mr. and Mrs. James Conway at the United Presbyterian church Sunday evening, September 5, to an appreciative congregation.

This sequence of pictures was produced at Sterling college, Sterling, Kans., under the direction of David Garlick and Mr. Conway. Students of the college made up the cast.

John and Betty Stam were missionaries in China who were sent to a pioneer mission station where they were killed by communists.

Other parts of the program included a song service, special numbers, prayer, scripture and an offering which was sent to the China Inland mission.

Mr. and Mrs. Conway, who have spent the summer at Cleveland, O., have been guests at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Carl Christon. They left last week for Denver, Colo., to enter college.

Wayne G. Lampshire, Polk, Takes Bride

PAGE—Yellow gladioli and pompons appointed the chancel and lighted candles marked the processional aisle of the Southminster Evangelical United Brethren church at Lincoln where the marriage of Miss Dorothy Ruth Witte to Wayne G. Lampshire, son of Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Lampshire of Polk, was solemnized on Sunday afternoon, September 5. The 2:30 o'clock ceremony was solemnized by Rev. Marvin Herrick and the organist, Mrs. E. R. Sellmeyer, played the wedding music and accompanied Mrs. Dorothy Liebhart, the vocal soloist.

As her sister's matron-of-honor, Mrs. Donald Dugan wore a ballerina-length frock of yellow net over matching taffeta, and carried a colonial bouquet of yellow and white carnations. The candle-lighters, Miss Miriam Eckles and Miss Candace Eckles of Gresham, who took their places at the altar with the bride party, wore ballerina-length frocks of aqua net over satin. Diane Fuller was the flower-girl and Bruce Edward Dixon carried the ring.

LeMoine Jones served Mr. Lampshire as bestman, and seating the guests were Donald Dugan and Ned Nevin.

The bride, given in marriage by J. N. Smith of York, chose a gown of white imported lace for her wedding. An illusion yoke, outlined with a pattern of the lace, created an off-shoulder line in the long-sleeved fitted bodice, and added bouffancy was given the wait-length skirt by means of a front panel of pleated net. Her tiered veil of bridal illusion was banded with lace and was held to the head with a half-hat of lace and net, dotted with pearls. She carried a bouquet of pink roses.

Following the reception in the church parlors, Mr. Lampshire and his bride left for a honeymoon trip to Montana, after which they will go to Tulsa, Okla., to reside.

Mrs. Lampshire is a graduate of Nebraska Wesleyan university where she was a member of Phi Mu sorority and she also attended the University of Nebraska graduate school of social work. Mr. Lampshire attended Nebraska Wesleyan university where he was a member of Theta Chi fraternity. He was graduated from the University of Nebraska where he was a member of Sigma Gamma Epsilon, geology honorary fraternity.

Mr. Lampshire is the only grandson of Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Russell of Page, Mrs. Russell and her daughter, Mrs. Elmer Spann of Atkinson, attended the rite.
