Prairieland Talk Wanna Buy Pickstown?

By ROMAINE SAUNDERS, Retired, Former Frontier Editor

LINCOLN-Pickstown, S.D., the home of the creators of the Ft. Randall dam, has been put up for sale.

That Missouri river community just across our border in South Dakota, has witnessed much of historic interest and is rich in pioneer lore. For many years federal troops were stationed there to protect settlers from the scalping knives of Spotted Tail's warriors and to discourage outlaws.

O'Neill at an early day was the trading post for soldiers and others at Randall and one of the first graves in the east cemetery just to the northwest of the village called O'Neill was that of Captain Hooker, who had been in command at Ft. Randall. Mrs.

Hooker, the widow of the cap-Romaine tain, had the body of her hus-Saunders band exhumed and taken to his former home in the East for permanent burial.

It doth appear that the cards have been stacked against Senator McCarthy. Must we conclude that the senator's associates in the halls of congress have been touched with envy because of what one of their number has brought to light? The committee set up to "investigate" the Wisconsin senator start their investigation by a unanimous vote to bar McCarthy and his counsel from presenting their evidence. Maybe the senate committee should now be investigated,

A friend sends me a copy of the Washington, D.C., Evening Star, an 80-page edition of an early September date, which pictures the recent parade of the American Legion men and women and says editorially it was the greatest and most colorful event that has appeared in the nation's capitol since General Grant's troops and officers came down Pennsylvania avenue after the close of the war between the Northern and Southern states. The Legion, as a patriotic organization, has taken over since the Grand Army of the Republic has become extinct. Colonel Towle, the hair-raising orator of O'Neill's Grand Army post, Comrades Mack, Skirving, Slattery and all who wore the GAR badge hereabout are in their graves up on the hill. Legion patriots must now unfurl their banners of freedom until they, too, have gone the way of the Roman legions and those who followed after.

With the passing of the Ewing Advocate "30" has been called for another Holt county newspaper. From a total of 20 newspapers that have been published in Holt county, the number is now reduced to four. Ewing had an Item, published by Clarence Selah, who later moved it to O'Neill. Clyde King, the gifted author of "Noman's Column" and joint publisher of The Frontier in the early '90's, started his printing and newspaper career in the Ewing Item plant and boasted to us fellows that he had "fed" 10,000 envelopes through the Gordon job press in one day and had run the press by foct power. John Trommershauser was another early day lawyer-politician who published a paper in Ewing. About every lawyer and politician thought he had to have a personal organ in the way of a weekly paper. It made jobs for a score of hand compositors, if nothing else.

Meredith were entertaining in their home at First and Everett streets a niece of Mrs. Meredith,. Mrs. Bird Butcher, and her two daughters. . . A 9-pound girl was reported arriving at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John McManus a day in July, 1903. . . Lightning killed five horses at the John Wrede ranch in northern Holt county.

Our democratic friends have been so long deprived of control at the statehouse that they had about given up hope, but National Committeeman Boyle over at Omaha sees a ray of light in what he concludes was indifference on the part of Nebraska patriots upon the occasion of the president's visit. When a town the size of McCook furnishes a crowd of 30,000 to greet President Ike maybe Mr. Boyle should revise his estimate.

A care-encumbered lonely soul a few blocks up the street felt that she could no longer encounter the storms of life and she was making her escape from it all by the hangman's noose, but was out of luck again-the rope broke when her 200 pounds came down. Damage was repaired at a hospital where they all go now, from a guy with a sore toe to a matron who gives birth to a new citizen.

Eisenhower and 1956

A considerable amount of speculation has already risen over the course President Dwight D. Eisenhower will follow at the 1956 republican national convention. Visitors to the Denver white house lately have reported that the president does not intend to run again, and this has set off a chain of comments.

Only about one thing is certain at this stage of the political speculation. That is that the president, and every other republican official, has no knowledge of conditions which will prevail in the summer of 1956. If the country is at war, we are willing to go on record as predicting that Mr. Eisenhower will offer his services again.

If other circumstances arise which tend to make the president feel that he has a job to finish, we believe Mr. Eisenhower will decide to run again, even if there is no war. If there is some particular condidate who seems assured of the nomination if Mr. Eisenhower does not run, we believe this would have a considerable bearing on his decision

Only if the country is in relatively sound financial condition and if there are several strong candidates for the republican nomination, in which situation the president's weight could swing the convention to his choice, the president might step down. There is no doubt that being president of the United States is no picnic and that President Eisenhower is tired of the great game of politics.

However, it seems to be easier for presidents to conclude that they may not run for reelection two years before the time comes than it is the year of the nominations. In Mr. Eisenhower's case, we are willing to go on record that the president still maintains a high degree of personal popularity throughout the country, and that he is the strongest single personality in the party, and able to draw the largest number of votes,

Thus, if for any reason the president declines to offer his services in 1956, the republican party will suffer at the polls as the result. So far, few top republican officials are willing to believe that the president will not run, but then we remember a day in the spring of 1952.

We hadn't thought President Truman could step down either, but he did.

Crimes Decrease in England

Sir John Nott-Bower, metropolitan London police commissioner, revealed recently that the crime rate in London is on the decline. Contrary to the trend in the United States, and in our largest city, New York, the crime rate in London England, as shown in Sir John's annual report, is the fact that a decrease has been registered in the number of arrests of persons under 21-yearsof-age. This news from England points up the seriousness of the increase in crime in the United States.

In his last report, for instance, Police Commissioner Francis W. H. Adams of New York reported that in almost every crime the six-months' figures for this year are up over the six-months' figures for 1953. The rise in crimes among teenagers has been especially discouraging and should get every citizen's sincere attention.

Off the coast of England is the Isle of Man where juvenile delinquency is virtually non-existant. Authorities there are empowered to publicly wallop a juvenile who has flagrantly broken the law. Curfews are imposed on those under 16. Delinquency on the Isle of Man? There isn't

'Melon Swiping' (From The Stanton Register)

A few days ago state papers circulated a story originating in the deep South wherein a group of youngsters were arraigned in court on a watermelon stealing charge.

It's probably one of the best on that particular subject. After hearing the testimony, the judge simply rapped his gavel and ordered all those within the room who had never swiped a watermelon to stand. None stood.

"Case dismissed," said the judge, noncommittally.

While one cannot countenance stealing in any way, we were all young once and there's something about lifting a melon that seems almost justifiable and certainly is difficult to regard as a crime, even though it is. You might term it one of those things where people simply wink their eyes while they "tsk, tsk" the offender.
