Legislative Council's Report Next

LINCOLN—With the noise of the election campaign dying away, this week the statehouse turned toward the coming report session of the legislative council.
 The council, composed of the same 43 men as sit in the regular legislature, will convene to consider the recommendations and reports made by its committees in the past 16 months.
 Out of these reports will come legislative bills. And, if past experience holds true, the 1955 session of the legislature will pass a large number of these proposals.
 It is in the legislative council and its committees that many of these problems demanding some kind of legislation are mulled over and given studied consideration. This saves wear and tear during the regular session when the facts themselves are likely to be swallowed up in the heat and fury of debate.
 This time there are 22 reports, about three times as many as usual. They range all over the map as far as subject matter is concerned.
 Usual procedure is to read them, discuss them somewhat, and approve them. Nothing done at this session is in any way binding on the coming legislature.
Recommendations—
 Here are some of the recommendations legislative council committees have made after studying a variety of subjects.
 Change the law so a citizen must be re-examined for his driver's license at least every five years. Add $1 to the license fees and allocate it to schools to hold driver training courses for students from 15 to 21.
 Increase the size of the safety patrol to get greater highway safety.
 Tighten up on laws on sex crimes.
 Keep the rental on state school lands at 6 percent of the appraised value but peg this appraised value to the average value in the country of that class of land.
 Retain teachers under the present state retirement system and don't put them under social security. (Congress changed the law recently and the legislature may change its mind on this.)
 Change the school reorganization law so that if a county reorganization committee fails to make a report for two years in a row it must be dissolved and a new committee elected.
 Add three or more field men to the state department of public instruction to help local school districts with reorganization.
 Cut out the petition method of reorganization except when two or three districts wish to combine because a new building is immediately needed.
 Allow cities and villages to make special levies to raise money for anti-pollution measures.
 Set up a state water pollution committee to work with the cities and villages to get them to stop dumping sewage into the rivers.
 Amend present Nebraska-Iowa boundary laws to allow eight counties along the Missouri to extend their boundaries to new middle of river channel.

 Allow confiscation of illegal firearms.
 Set up compulsory insurance program for state safety patrol (three men have been killed in line of duty recently).
 Amend reclamation laws to grant specific authority to repay contracts with the federal bureau of reclamation.
No Charges Needed—
 Some committees came back with the report that after they had covered a subject it was decided nothing needed to be done. One such committee studied the banking laws. Another studied the financial operations of the state's four teacher training colleges.
 Sometimes a committee will suggest a topic for study next biennium. One such suggestion came from a committee studying the irrigation laws. It said that since pump irrigation is becoming so prevalent in Nebraska now, studies should be made on whether any restrictive legislation is needed.
 All of the recommendations in these reports may not become legislation. The legislature's big battles may come on other subjects. But these will form the "bread and butter" bills in Nebraska's attempt to solve its problems and stay progressive.

Too Much Work—
 Another study committee found it had bitten off too big a task for the time being. This is the highway safety committee of citizens and state officials, appointed by Gov. Robert Crosby at the time last spring when the death rate on the highways was climbing at a sickening rate.
 The committee decided it would recommend that Nebraska adopt the so-called uniform vehicle code. That is a standard set of traffic laws adopted by many states. Its advantage is that a driver from another state would know what the traffic laws were here.
 But fitting this into the present laws will be no easy matter, the committee learned. In fact, it might take a year or more to study by legal experts. Governor Crosby, who had hoped to have something ready for the coming session of the legislature, said this was "frustrating." The best that can be done, apparently, is to plug up a few gaps in the present laws with remedial legislation.

Toll Road Setback—
 Nebraska officials got a discouraging rebuff from Colorado at a Denver meeting on toll road possibilities. Nebraska has been working with Iowa to try to get a turnpike stretching west from Chicago, Ill. It was hoped that Colorado would pitch in and help to get the road built toward Denver.
 But Colorado officials seemed ching about the whole idea. Whether this was because they figure they have all the toll roads they need (with a turnpike from Denver to Boulder) or whether they are planning to work with Kansas remains to be seen.
 On the other end of the road, Iowa motel owners announced they plan to fight in the Iowa legislature against any efforts to have a toll road there.

Advisory or Executive?—
 Governor Crosby recently praised the good work done by the new state advisory highway commission. But reporters learned that some of the commission members didn't feel the group has enough power. As it now stands, the commission may only advise the state engineer and the state highway department.
 Chairman Arthur Coad of Omaha told a reporter that more power is needed by the commission if it is to get anything done. Commissioners Fred Attebery of Mitchell and Arthur Albrecht agreed. The other four declined to answer at this time.
