The more populous counties like the present formulas which are based on census figures and motor vehicle registration data. As they grow more populous, they gain more of a share of the gas tax at the expense of the more thinly-settled counties.

This has brought a demand by the less populous counties for a new formula ulous counties that each time there was a new census they would not get a smaller share.

At the same time the bill was designed to take away a good deal of money from the most populous counties, especially Douglas (Omaha) and Lancaster (Lincoln).

But to keep the seven Omaha and three Lincoln senators from fighting the measure, the bill contained a provision that would split differently the money coming to their counties. More money would be allocated to city

So in the long run the chief losers would be the country roads in the more populous counties. But it was pointed out that Douglas county is already blacktopping its county roads and Lancaster county has most of its gravelled.

Whether the compromise bill would have enough to please most of the senators could not be known until general debate started. Those framing the measure could only hope they were stalling off a fight that could affect other important matters before this

Blind School-

Meanwhile, early in the ses- day; Sunday-school, 10:30 a.m. sion the legislature was dealing with a subject having all the pathos imaginable

That is the effort by some parents of blind Nebraska children to have the state school for the blind moved away from Nebraska

They contend that the structure there is antiquated and point to a state fire marshal's report which virtually called it a firetrap. However, they say that rather than keeping the school at Nebraska City it should be moved to some town more centrally located and with a good college.

Their choice, made at a meeting last fall, was Kearney. So among the bills introduced in the legislature was one to move the school to Kearney, where training could be offered by the college there. This, of course, brought opposi- worship at 7:30 o'clock. tion from Nebraska City. Another blow came for Nebraska City Wednesday, 7.30 p.m. when Gov. Robert Crosby in his
