Youthful Senators Forming Bloc?

LINCOLN—The first signs that a progressive bloc may be emerging in the legislature were to be seen this week in the legislature.

One sign was an innocent looking letter from four young senators to State Tax Commissioner Fred Herrington asking for information on the taxation of railroads and of motor vehicles.

Signing it were Sens. Monroe Bixler of Harrison, William Metzger of Cedar Creek, Joseph Martin of Grand Island and Donald McGinley of Ogallala.

Observers believed that the letter was sent to obtain some ammunition with which to overpower any roadblocks the railroads set up in the way of the tax reform program.

It asked for the record of valuations and formulas used for assessing railroad property the past 10 years, income from this source, and formulas used for assessing motor vehicles. Tax Commissioner Herrington was asked for his "scientific estimate of the soundness of past formulas used by the state board of equalization in determining the valuations of railroads and motor vehicles.

By law the railroads themselves provide information on which they are taxed. The state board of equalization accepts it and valuations are set on that basis.

Two years ago at assessment time Gov. Robert Crosby remarked in surprise at a state board of equalization meeting that the railroads seemed to be the only ones in the state who pretty much set their own valuations. He said he imagined a great many real estate owners would like to have that privilege.

But of considerable importance, also, is the letter to Herrington might indicate some new blood stirring in the legislature.

Some observers felt the Herrington letter might be a bonding of some of the younger senators to work against this status quo elements in the legislature. It might form the nucleus to attract other legislators.

It could not be conveniently labeled anything like a "sales tax group" because Senator Martin, for example, is strongly against a sales tax. But it could be an element for the state to watch in the coming weeks.

Toll Roads—
Just when it began to look as if a toll road effort was doomed in Nebraska, Gov. Victor Anderson came out strong for the idea.

Every indication was that the legislature would refuse a $150,000 loan to the Nebraska Turnpike authority for engineering studies to see whether a toll road would pay in Nebraska.

A bill is even before the legislature to abolish the authority.

But then Governor Anderson attended a governors' conference at Evansville, Ind., and signed a resolution endorsing the toll road idea. When he came back, he said he wasn't "crushing" for a toll road but said he considered it eventually will span the United States. Whether it will cross Nebraska or some other state is the question, he said.

Governor Anderson said he would like the people to have the facts and then let them decide by a vote if possible. He said later he had no particular plan for this. It might be done either through an initiative or a referendum.

Mental Health—
The state board of control, already under fire for its operation of the penal institutions, got some severe criticism on Nebraska's mental health program.

At the invitation of the legislature, Douglas county Welfare Director, Philip Vogt of Omaha, and Dr. G. Lee Sandritter, superintendent of the Hastings state mental hospital, gave talks on their opinions on the subject.

Vogt was out-and-out critical of the board of control, contending it had shown "cynical attitudes, uninformed leadership, lack of concern and poor planning."

Doctor Sandritter with charts and diagrams showed the results of a program of "intensive early treatment" of mentally ill patients to cure them before their condition becomes permanent. It requires a staff of highly trained doctors and ward aides.

He said that because the board of control had held down salary scales at the mental hospitals the effectiveness of the program had fallen off the past two years. He declared there are 2,000 persons in the state mental hospitals who needn't be there if Nebraska had carried out "an up-to-date program."

newspaper groups were successful in getting the legislature judiciary committee to kill LB116, a bill which would have excluded the public and the press from juvenile court proceedings.

Dr. Frank Court of Lincoln said the bill was good because it would protect the child from bad publicity.

But Stu Bohacek, editor of the Wilber Republican, noted that most newspapers in the state don't use the names of juveniles—at least on their first offense.

Guy Ludi of Wahoo, chairman of the NPA legislative committee, said the bill was an example against the people's right to know what was going on in their courts. Lester Walker of the Fremont Guide & Tribune and Arch Donovan of the Lincoln Star also spoke against the bill at the committee hearing.
