Fresh Oranges For Bruncheon Tray

Fresh fruit is a "must" for any brunch, but here's something a bit different you'll want to try... refreshing California oranges, cut in a variety of ways and served on a tray of crisp greens. The juicy tang of the fresh oranges not only perks up appetites, but the oranges also furnish you with important health benefits you need to start your day right.

Each whole orange has more health values than ever before realized... especially since scientists have pointed out the benefits of the citrus bioflavonoids found in the golden orange. These bioflavonoids work together with vitamin C to help you to better health, particularly in cases such as colds, other respiratory infections, childbirth, and surgery, where your tiny blood vessel walls need strengthening. There are up to ten times more of these citrus bioflavonoids in the whole peeled oranges than in the strained juice alone... that's why it is such a good idea to serve fresh oranges often.
