and received more than his share of attention.

Initially, when the bird was taken outside for fresh air and exercise—and for a rest period, too—the bird was staked out with a leash like a calf. But in time, with his wings clipped, "Spotty" was permitted to hop about unhindered as the children played in the yard.

One day, "Spotty" unintentionally was left outside by himself. When the domesticated bird decided it was time to go indoors, he took a running leap at the screen door. The trick almost led to his undoing, but Gordon got the signal and admitted "Spotty" through the door. The bird waddled triumphantly into the kitchen, climbing into his box and took a snooze.

"Spotty" has no use for a perch. The box is okay. Why not? He gets a blanket like a pup or a kitten.

"Spotty" enjoys riding on the tricycle with his master. Best place to ride, "Spotty" has found, is on Gordon's shoulder—next to his right ear.
