Save-Trains Bill Advanced, 21-8

Nelson Makes Last-Ditch Stand

The Nebraska legislature has advanced the "save-the-trains" bill sought by northern Nebraska residents in an effort to bolster operation of the last remaining passenger trains between Omaha and Chadron on the Chicago & North Western.

The measure, with its language restricted so it is not expected to apply to any other line, would allow elimination of the flagman from the passenger train crew.

A motion last Friday afternoon by Sen. Charles Tvardik of Omaha to kill the bill failed, 11-17. Then the bill, sponsored by Sen. Frank Nelson of O'Neill, advanced, 21-8, for enrollment and review.

Fourteen were either not present or didn't vote when the save-the-trains bill was advanced from general to select file.

The bill came in for some heavy assaults Wednesday when it was advanced to final reading on a voice vote. LB 554 stemmed on toward passage despite efforts to derail it on the part of Sens. Harry Pizer of North Platte, George Syas of Omaha and Tvardik.

Pizer's motion to kill the bill was defeated, 25-10. Senator Nelson urged his colleagues "to consider the principal issue: Are you willing to give the territory served by these two trains a little relief and help save those trains?"

Pizer declared: "We're wasting our time trying to save one line of a railroad at the possible expense of losing the entire full crew law at some later date. Tvardik, another strong opponent, said the C&NW lost about 4 1/2-million-dollars last year and he questioned if five flagmen would make any difference.

Syas suggested LB 554 would be ineffective in view of existing work contracts between the unions and the railroad.

In final reading LB 554 must receive 22 (or more) votes and then receive the governor's signature to become law.

When Senator Nelson asked the legislature to admit or initiate the bill, it received a 31-6 vote on the floor. That was more than a month ago.

Passenger service on the 450-mile route is down now to one train each way daily and the C&NW is considering withdrawing trains 13 and 14, pointing to a 60-thousand-dollar annual operating loss. Some of this loss already has been overcome by stimulated passenger business.

Nelson has told the legislature about $30,000 is needed to balance income and outgo on the run. Elimination of the flagman would save about $28,000, he added.

Ira L. Watson of Inman, secretary-treasurer of the Save-the-Trains association, said Wednesday if LB 554 is enacted into law and the flagmen are eliminated he considered chances "very good" for keeping trains 13 and 14.

District Judge Lyle E. Jackson of Neligh said the association has been getting "wonderful cooperation" everywhere and he felt labor would want to cooperate, too. Jackson is a director of the train-saving group.

Fay Hill, Gordon banker-rancher and also a director, said he was confident more mail would be forthcoming for the trains "if we successfully hurdle the experimental period, now in its sixth month.

"I'm greatly encouraged," he said, "particularly if we can save 28-thousand-dollars on the flagmen in one stroke. I think we can keep these trains running for some time to come."

Association President Cal Stewart, publisher of The Frontier, lauded Senator Nelson for the train-saving work.
