Political Careers at Stake

CAPITOL NEWS LINCOLN — State authorities this week were still coping with a many-headed monster—problems created by the August 16-17 riot by hundreds of yelling, ram-paging, fire-setting convicts at the state penitentiary in Lincoln. Events were moving rapidly in the wake of this 13-hour arson rebellion which caught broadside a newly constituted state board of control in the midst of creating a "new look" in operations under its supervision. A mild, short-lived demonstration took place again Sunday afternoon at the trouble-ridden state penitentiary. The Sabbath uprising was put down quickly before it had time to spread.

At week's end it was not clear how all the participants in administering the institution would weather the storm. But the picture at that time seemed to have these general outlines:

1. There was some confusion as to who was running the penitentiary—Warden Joseph Bovey, State Penal Director B. B. Albert, the board of control or Gov. Victor Anderson. 2. The same old difficulty in pinning the blame for prison troubles was being found in this case. A few troublemakers among the prisoners? A weak administration? The same forces which worked to get rid of former Warden Herbert Hann seemed bent on ousting Bovey. Every out-break brings a delighted, "We told you so" from this faction. On the other hand, there seems to be no end to the trouble and there was little doubt Nebraskans are becoming tired of it.

3. Governor Anderson has become inextricably entangled in the situation. Although under the Nebraska constitution supervision of the institutions is vested in the board of control and not the governor, it is difficult for a governor to keep out when things are going wrong. In one sense he is responsible in that board of control members are appointed by governors. Governor Anderson is smashed deep in this particular situation because—rightly or wrongly—the public associates him with the appointment of former Statehouse Custodian Bovey as warden. The riot brought to light that Bovey had been leaning on Anderson's office for advice on administrative decisions.

4. A firm outline of "musts" was announced by Governor Anderson the day after the riot ended. These included a new maximum security building (known as the "jail" or "hole"); devising complete plans to meet every possible riot emergency at the penitentiary; and an overhauling of guard employment practices and wage scales. The governor's announcements, while perhaps not strictly his business under the constitution, apparently were made because Anderson wanted action and saw the board of control was still in the "investigation and discussion" stage.

5. The rebellion proved the doubtfulness of some of the board's past policies. In past years the board consistently resisted all suggestions that the prison jail be rebuilt. It has held down wage scales for guards although past and present prison officials have pleaded that they couldn't get good men for the salaries offered. The board has also tried to keep a firm hand over institution supervision, resenting any independent efforts by superintendents. This has repeatedly backfired with such superintendents as Dr. G. Lee Sandritter of the Hastings state hospital and George Morris of the state reformatory for men quite vocal in their criticism of board policies.

6. Although the average taxpayer might not like the taste, the rebellion called into question the advisability of penny-pinching. The state board of control had the best "savings" record of any major state agency the past two years, ending up with 15 percent of the money appropriated it by the 1953 legislature. No one could say that spending more money could have stopped the trouble. But apparently the taxpayer's fond dream of less spending didn't head off disaster, either.

7. The lack of a policy in informing the press bore its usual spoiled fruit. Although the "new" board under Tom Dredla of Crete was trying to establish sound press relations policies, these were down the drain during the riot as newsmen were kept outside the penitentiary gates and received no confirmation of the fire and rioting inside for five hours after it started. Governor Anderson insisted, "What difference does it make whether the public finds out something at 9 or 10:30?" The governor promised something would be done about this in the future, however.

At week's end the answers were being sorted out. On the finding of solutions could well lie the political careers of some of the men involved as well as the future of the board of control system itself. Outstate observers were quite generally agreed that concessions made during the March riot and the invitation to more trouble, which dominated the state news last week.

Schools and Welfare— A majority of Nebraska taxpayers apparently will be facing bigger tax bills this fall. Attention is likely to be focused on the 22 percent increase in the levies for support of state government. But many a citizen could look from his front doorstep and see some equally alarming increases. In a number of places the increasing number of youngsters coupled with the decreasing numbers of teachers have created a situation bound to bring higher school taxes.

Other high school taxes are being paid in towns trying to continue inefficient high schools or where reorganization to bring in surrounding territory has failed. County taxes, too, are mounting in many places. State Auditor

August Known as Miserable Month ROCK FALLS — August—the month of family reunions and vacationing, and the weatherman making it miserable. Still there are those who will dery nature and go on their merry way to various vacation spots or perhaps just to pay a few days visit to some relative or friend. Ray Johnson places much of the blame on mounting welfare costs. And these come not because of more people on the rolls, he explains, but because doctors and hospitals are charging more for treating welfare clients. County boards in some places are begging doctors to "let up" with little success. Johnson reports. One northwestern Nebraska county has threatened to hire a county physician to care for its welfare clients. Holt countyans are faced with the highest mill levy in history. This in the face of valuations below one and two years ago. The state levy is the highest since 1920—the year constitutional changes were made in the tax setup.

Nebraskans Must Renew Licenses Nebraskans must renew their driver's licenses this year. The present drivers' permits expire September 1. The cost of the renewed permits is $2 and they must be secured from the county treasurer in the county in which you reside. If an individual fails to renew his license by the deadline date, November 1, he must take the regular driver's examination. Under no circumstances will an driver's license be renewed prior to September 1. Renewals may be made by mail by sending the old permits to the treasurer along with the $2 fee. There's one new angle in the driver's license program. It concerns teen-agers. Beginning September 18, persons who have not reached their 20th birthday anniversary, cannot secure a regular driver's license. Instead, they will be issued a special probationary license, good for one year only, and costing $1.50 per year. However, if you are under 20 years of age and make application before September 18, you can renew your present license at the regular $2 fee for two years.

AWARD OF MERIT presented to CONSUMERS PUBLIC POWER DISTRICT COLUMBUS, NEBRASKA

An AWARD of MERIT That Pays Dividends in Better Electric Service! Recently, and for the second consecutive year, The National Safety Council granted Consumers Public Power District its Annual Award of Merit for a noteworthy achievement in the field of safety in electric utility operations. The Management and Employees of Consumers are proud of this record for two reasons. First, it means that a number of our employees and their families were spared the grief and suffering that follows in the wake of accidents. Secondly, accidents are costly in loss of manpower and property damage. In reducing accident frequency and severity a contrasting increase in operating efficiency is obtained. To you, our electric customer, this means that highly skilled personnel are able to spend more man-hours on the job serving your electrical needs. By reducing lost man-hours and property damage due to accidents a significant contribution to lower operating costs is made—a fact which results in more efficient service, at lower cost, to you!
