Almost as soon as it hit they became lost and followed the edge of the meadow, they hoped, knowing that somewhere nearby there should be a dugout. Believing he smelled smoke, he told the man to stay with the horses and he would attempt to track the odor of the smoke. He had gone only about three feet when he walked into the side of the dugout and found the door. The occupant of the dugout took care of the horses and they stayed on until the storm abated.
