Improves Farm in 1907 for $1,200

 planned a reception for newcomers in the community. The Snyders left home at 8 o'clock in the morning to spend the day at the Leahy ranch and a nearby lake on the river. Somebody owned a boat and the rig was kept busy by those who enjoyed boating.

Some of the men went down the river about a mile while some of the women (including Mrs. Snyder) stayed behind and fished. A group in a boat was having fun when Mrs. Snyder noticed that Roy Snyder and the little Sampson girl had become frightened. The two got out. Mrs. Snyder observed that the boat still appeared to be overloaded.

Suddenly, she heard a woman scream, the boat turned bottomside up in the water, and there was no sign of life.

No one knew what to do. The men were gone. Mrs. Snyder resorted to a shrill, trilling sound she often used to summon her husband to dinner from any place on the farm.

It was about noon and it was thought the men (even if they heard the summons) would consider it a call to lunch.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Snyder on their wedding day... critics considered her skirt "entirely too short."

Mr. Snyder, who was with the men downstream, heard his wife's shrieking and correctly interpreted that something was wrong.

They hurried back and panic broke out anew as nobody could figure out just what to do.

The woman who had screamed the first alarm had stayed in her tracks and kept a "fix" on the spot in the water where the boat upset.

Mr. Drum was a diver, but his long, hard run had made it impossible for him to go in until he had regained his breath.

Someone suggested a fish hook be fastened to a heavy pole. This was done and a body was brought to the surface. Other bodies were recovered later.

It was a sad "reception" day. Four had drowned in one of the worst tragedies since settlers had come to the country.

The bodies of Mr. Sampson, Sampson baby, Mrs. Hollie Tracy and Allie Drum were mute testimony of the misguided idea of overloading a boat built for two.

The scream, the capsizing, the agonizing moments of helplessness, and the subsequent events of the day changed Mrs. Snyder's dark hair to snow white.

The Snyders became the parents of one daughter, Zola, who married George Fink. Zola died in 1946, leaving two children—Ross of Wichita, Kans., and Lois

(who is now Mrs. Thomas Sinner). Ross and Zola have been "very close" to their grandparents down through the years.

The Snyders moved a second house onto the farm when the son-in-law and daughter came to farm the land.

In 1946 the Snyders moved their house into town and have lived in it comfortably in their retirement.
