Trowbridge, Parks Back Deers

PAGE — Mr. and Mrs. Dick Trowbridge were two deer hunters from this section of the country who brought back a deer apiece in the exercise of their permits.

The first day was fruitless except for the extreme weariness incurred in the 10- to 12-mile tramp without even the sight of a track, let alone a target deer.

They were accompanied by Mrs. Trowbridge's uncle, Earl ("Scoop") Parks. The party was able to bag two deer the second day, almost identical animals. Parks' kill weighed 99 pounds and the Trowbridges' beat it by four pounds.

The third day the Trowbridges brought down a five-point buck, a really fine specimen, weighing in at 175 1/2 pounds and listed as a 3 1/2- to 4 1/2-year-old deer. The smaller ones were adjudged to be in the 1 1/2-year-old class.

The first two were killed out on the Big Eagle, at a point about 10 miles north and six west of O'Neill and the big one was a product of the Brush creek region in the vicinity of Phoenix.

Brush creek is one of the lesser tributaries of the upper Niobrara river.

Jerry Cuddy left Saturday for Camp Chaffee, Ark., after spending a 10-day leave with his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Donohoe, and other relatives.

'Tear Gas' Drives Page Family Out

By MRS. N. D. ICKES, SR., The Frontier Feature Writer

PAGE — Many people leave home for various and sundry reasons. Families leave home, less often, and for fewer reasons.

The Dick Trowbridge family left home recently and in complete agreement that it was the only thing to do, under the circumstances. They left because an intruder, coming suddenly and unexpectedly, challenged their inclination to co-habitate. Or rather, they were given little choice, under stress of a highly incensed "special sense" that was over-stimulated.

The family took refuge with Mr. Trowbridge's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Trowbridge.

Each day as he returned to do the barn chores, Dick checked for signs of abandonment. The impossible situation had all the earmarks of becoming a permanent thing and it began to look like Dick's family had moved in with his parents for the winter.

As is the case in all arguments, there were two sides in this case and it was apparent that the intruder had the best of the argument. Even though carried on in silence on the part of the intruder, it was never-the-less effective.

Advice, like always, was plentiful—and free.

Finally, in desperation and as a first and last resort, a trap (proved) was set—a steel one, cleverly disguised and covered to minimize the suspicions of the hunted one.

"Squatter's rights" and possession counting nine points in law, all things added up in favor of the intruder.

Tear gas, an effective weapon often used to oust an ambushed fugitive, in this case was in the hands of the opposition.

The neighbors have it that the eviction was accomplished with the loss of only one life (that of the intruder) and "that" death was brought about without raising a neighborhood "stink."

Yep, you guessed it. The intruder for whom the Trowbridge gave up their residence was a miserable, little, despicable member of the Cacostile family known as a civet cat.

Mrs. Dan Troshynski presented a review in brief of the O'Neill meeting and demonstrated as many ideas as time would permit on Christmas decorations to be made at home. Ideas on Christmas foods and gifts were introduced and literature distributed. Plans were made for an all-day meeting January 17 at the Raymond Heiss home, to which the husbands are invited. A covered dish meal will be served at noon.
