Throw Out Game and Fish Laws

By ROMAINE SAUNDERS, Retired, Former Editor The Frontier

LINCOLN—Sheriff Sam Stobbe of Hall county got front page prominence and his picture in Lincoln's evening paper when he came out in denunciation of the secretary of the state game commission calling for the removal of the assumption that the commission official had shown contempt of the laws he is employed to enforce.

Others join in the demand for the gentleman's removal from the commission pay roll. None have gone so far as they should in calling for tearing all game and fish laws from our statute books and abandoning the game and fish setup.

Fellowship and casual contacts today—four venerable patriots parked in the shade and watching traffic whiz by as they exchange bits of earthly wisdom. To add a touch of the dramatics a polished old native of the Emerald Isle put on a little poetic performance, followed by each of the others in turn.

Jehovah's Witnesses may have fantastic beliefs—which is a Yankee privilege—but they also have the filthy lure. They recently opened the group's one-million-dollar national headquarters in North York, near Toronto.

Dick Is Okay By Us

President Eisenhower will be the oldest candidate for the presidency ever nominated in a national convention by either the republican or democratic party.

When Ike is renominated by the republican convention at San Francisco, Calif., on August 15, he will be just two months shy of his 66th birthday anniversary.

Only once in its 100-year history has the republican party nominated a presidential candidate who had passed his 60th birthday anniversary. The candidate was Dwight D. Eisenhower in 1952.

The oldest republican candidates prior to Eisenhower were Herbert Hoover and William McKinley. Both were 57 at the time of their nomination.

And, barring more surgery (which is entirely possible, our doctor friends tell us) or another coronary, Ike is a leadpipe cinch for the nomination; if not a shoo-in come November.

Incidentally, Ike is the only 65-year-old man we ever heard of who experienced a coronary and major surgery within a span of a few months and emerged in "fine shape." This from his aides and his publicists.

Frankly, he appears haggard and worn in the current crop of news pictures, and he looks about like we could expect him to look after his illness.

Ike's health and how long he can stay on the job after November are to be the democratic campaign issues—plus his running mate, Vice-President Richard Nixon.

The vice-presidential nominee on the GOP ticket very well could be the next president. Normally the vice-presidential nominee is an "also ran" and gets little notice.

That left-wingers in the republican party and liberals of all stripes have been trying to "dump Nixon" for a long time and the movement flared into the open last week when Minnesota's Harold Stassen, a member of the president's cabinet, openly began plugging Gov. Christian Herter. Ike's health, without doubt, is the underlying reason for Stassen's sounding off.

The trial balloon sent aloft by Mr. Stassen boomeraged and should, by all reason, consign the former Minnesota governor to the political graveyard.

Oddly, however, President Ike did not rush to Nixon's defense, publicly, and, until these lines were written, there had been an ominous silence. Dick Nixon's cardinal "sins" are:

- 1. He's too young. (There have been other vice-presidents younger than Nixon is today; yet he already has served one term and knows the ropes.)
2. He has helped to chase "commies" out of government. (This project always flushes out the liberal reporters, commentators and pinko leaders who shout "unfair.")
3. He's branded as a conservative republican. (This label hasn't been too popular with the internationalists, one worders, new dealers, new deal republicans, etc.)
Republican leaders in Nebraska, Oklahoma, California, Iowa, South Dakota, to mention a few, line up solidly behind Dick.

Good Old Days?

(Reed O'Hanlon, Jr., in the Blair Pilot-Tribune) While we poke fun at TV, radios, hot-rod cars, etc., and wish out loud for the good old days of maw's home-made ice cream, the old swimming hole and the joy of hitching up Old Nell to pull

In the story of "Cape Cod" the author, Thoreau, tells of the men whose lives are spent out at sea along the coast of New England searching for lost anchors, having found a market for what they salvage. Out on the sea of life mankind needs an anchor, principles of truth to guide the footsteps away from forbidden paths.

Lincoln will have a new mayor in the person of Bennett Martin, a member of the city council the past year or more. That name rings a bell in O'Neill, Bennett Martin is a pioneer of Holt county and long a citizen and official in the old town and I believe has two daughters living there now.

Another of those democratic notables with a longing eye on the white house has paid prairieland a visit, each bowed under a burden for the distressed farmer. This last visitor is a New York prince of political longings and our own prince of political visions, Mr. Boyle, over at Omaha, had the honor and whatever pleasure such things afford of entertaining in his home the notable from New York.

Civil defense got into action today in Lincoln. Out of the heavenly blue above came the silent, crashing bomb to blow us all into kingdom come—just a supposition. And who of the city's hundred and fifty thousand were "evacuated" to live in the court house and city hall, rushed to waiting cars and were whisked down to Crete, while community citizens were left behind to parry the jolt of that fictitious "bomb attack" and that is as much as it will ever be.

The story comes of a father and mother walking along the sea shore with their 4-year-old son, who for the last time was to look upon the ocean waves and nature's picture about him. One eye had been removed and the other was to come out if the child were to live.

when you install a TV antenna avoid power lines! TV antennas and power lines don't mix...carelessness in selecting a location for an outside TV antenna is inviting danger in the form of fire or serious bodily injury should the TV mast or guy wires fall on a nearby power line. Consumers Public Power District, Nebraska's dependable and progressive low-cost electric service, brings this special safety message to you because of the extensive use of outside TV antennas and their proximity to power lines. Electricity, enough to kill, can flow through any metal or other conducting material that touches high-voltage lines. It can even flow through wood. Should a tall, top-heavy TV antenna fall across a power line, the mast and guide wires become energized and are then potential killers and conductors of fire. If you have a new house and are about to set up an outside TV antenna, make sure that should it ever topple that it would not fall across power lines. If you have a TV antenna atop your house now and you have a question relative to its nearness to a power line, please call your power office for advice. in case of accident... If an accident does happen, never touch a person or equipment in contact with a power line. A dry board or dry rope may be used to pull anyone free from contact. Give first aid and call a doctor at once. Call the power office right away—and tell them what happened and where it happened. CONSUMERS PUBLIC POWER DISTRICT
