Poor Wheat Farmer on Tour

By ROMAINE SAUNDERS, Retired, Former Editor The Frontier

LINCOLN—I met and talked today with two strangers from other states—the first one encountered being a polished young gentleman from one of the large cities in Texas, who had come to our capital city to impart spiritual instruction to the thousand students of Union college, who have come from far places of earth to obtain an education.

My visit with him for a few minutes brought me the information that he is a nephew of a friend of mine of other years and bygone memories.

Romaine Saunders

The other one met with stood out in marked contrast to the polished gentleman—a "poor farmer" from North Dakota, a native of Russia who is happy now to be in America out of reach of the Reds. A poor Dakota wheat farmer who had been on a trip to New York, Washington, D. C., Florida and was headed for Walla Walla, Wash., where he was taking his daughter, who is a nurse. He planned to make it back to his Dakota farm by mid-April to plant the spring wheat, and was taking off as soon as the automobile mechanics finished going over his car.

Some items out of the past: Pat Biglin started the morning of July 6, 1906, with four horses hitched to the Standard Oil tank on wheels for Middlebranch and Venus, accompanied by Maylon Price. . . O'Neill spellbinders were in demand that year as Fourth of July orators, M. P. Kinkaid at Spencer, E. H. Whelan at Ewing and M. F. Harrington at Elgin. . . O. F. Biglin went to Inman to supervise the burial of Mrs. John Autlin, who died in Norfolk, the remains brought to her home at Inman. . . John McCaffery was out again after being laid up some days following a surgical operation. . . Mr. and Mrs. Bitney, M. R. Sullivan and John McNichols were among visitors from Atkinson over Sunday. . . The county treasurer's office reported a harvest of "back taxes" coming in. . . The livestock market was flourishing, steers bringing from $3 to $4 a hundred. . . If I was still a resident of O'Neill, other than in memory, I would promote a campaign to bring to naught the proposed change of street names as the restless guys of the Chamber of Commerce want it. North and south and east and west streets given all identical names in the form of numbers, those in one direction known as streets, the others as avenues, can but result in confusion. Is nothing to be left of the old town that the hand of pioneers formed?

Dr. K. Ross Tobie, director of the Montana State Historical society, will be the leading one to address the group at the Nebraska Historical Society spring meeting in Fremont May 19. Montana Jack has our cordial invitation to come, too.

The editor of the Lincoln Evening Journal, arrested and taken to court on a charge of disturbing the peace and passing a bottle of fire-water to a minor, pleads not guilty. The editor that is not disturbing the peace of mind of some folks, doesn't amount to much. In the days of Hans Kautzman, Holt county had editors that not only disturbed the peace of rival factions but had knockdowns followed by no court action. You might get hauled into court for libel, but not for disturbing the peace or setting 'em up for some kid. And the minors stood on an equal footing with their elders at the Critic across the street from us lads on the waterwagon at The Frontier.

Community Chest Could Work

Comes now a plan to create a community chest in O'Neill and combine all the leadership, energy and resources that can be mustered into one campaign.

The idea was advanced at last week's March meeting of the Chamber of Commerce and a committee was appointed to investigate the workability of such a plan for cities of the O'Neill class. Larger cities, of course, have employed the community chest idea for many years.

Some organizations do not care to participate in a community chest plan. They prefer to go it alone.

It would seem to us that if a community chest fund-raising program were to be inaugurated here, the distribution of the work entailed, the broadening of the solicitation and the net results would be quite satisfactory. At least, it's worth a try.

As things now stand, a dozen very worthy projects go it alone, sometimes simultaneously. Leaders who are willing to work on these projects finally wear out and it becomes a great problem to find an individual who will serve in a capacity of leadership.

At the block level, frequently it is the same person rapping doors for each successive drive.

We think the community chest idea could be adopted here and it would work. The various agencies would state their quotas to the community chest board, the goal would be fixed, dates would be designated and there would be an all-out effort to make the quota.

Some agencies, as we stated before, would rather go it alone. Nothing would prevent reluctant agencies from doing so, but it would be more satisfactory if all would cooperate.

The Chamber has appointed a committee to study the matter and, at this juncture, we would like to give the community chest plan encouragement. We feel—and hope—it can be implemented and worked out successfully.

Girls Better Drivers

By Bill Cox in the Pierce County Leader The Nebraska insurance commission has decided that girl drivers under 25 years of age are much better drivers than boys under 25 years of age. So parents and young folks who buy auto insurance from now on will find that it costs less for girl drivers than boy drivers in the age group from 16 to 25.

These rates are based on the auto accidents in the past year. A boy between the age of 16 and 25 had been proven as the most dangerous auto operator on the highway today.

A public liability and property damage policy for a car owned or driven by a boy between 16 and 25 will be raised 41 percent.

The Nebraska insurance commission deals only in facts and figures. There is one danger that is perhaps being overlooked: If insurance rates for

The last time I saw him, he sat in the lobby of a hotel in the capital city where he had come to intercede in behalf of a citizen of his community in the picturesque northern regions of Holt county who had been doing time in the state prison for real or fancied crimes. It was ever Hugh O'Neill's thoughtful acts that brought renewed courage to the underdog. As I passed the hotel and glanced in at the glass front, there sat Hugh, a notable from Holt county where I soon would be again. A native of Ireland, he had the combative characteristics and resentment of that people when they see a wrong being done to another. He also felt that the fellows who did the hanging should have been strung up in place of their victim, young Kid Wade. Patriot, but against most every thing, he would put even Gus Doyle to the bad in discussing politics or religion. But he met his match in theological subjects when he ran into the late Pastor Ohmart, a freelance preacher who made Hugh hang his head and walk away.

The story came out of dry Oklahoma via radio. His name was Joshua and he stood before the court to answer to a charge of bootlegging. Are you the Joshua that made the sun stand still? The judge asked the prisoner. "No, replied he, "I made the moonshine."

His name is Lybarger. He refused to sell his soul for a job. Serving the city of Lincoln as a fireman, the chief of police ordered that a gun be strapped on the fireman and strut around with a policeman. Lybarger has a conscience, an unusual thing in these modern days; his job was to put out fires, save life and property, not defend the peace and dignity of our capital city. He refused to carry a gun and serve also as a policeman. You're fired! He has taken an appeal and the outcome will be of interest whether the right of conscience goes with the job of fireman.

On the Fink farm down near Page 130 feet underground bones were discovered when boring a well which were sent to the state university at Lincoln and a highbrow, who may have lived about that time, let's us in on it by pronouncing the bones to be those of a "three-toed" horse of four million years ago. We were not there at the time but more than likely the animal was buried there at the time of the world flood about the year 2,350, B. C.

Even the best of 'em stub their toe some time. What his design was in the matter is not clear to this prairie wolf, but President Eisenhower gave the citizens my great native state of Wisconsin a slap in the face by putting the stamp of social ousting on Senator McCarthy.

High in the distant azure heavens afar the March moon moves in celestial glory across the prairieland sky. I walked last night where its light lay in subdued shadow along the way. The human forms moving in a row their mortal shadows shape as the come and go under the glow of that celestial-illuminated lantern held by the Master of the midnight show. We can not reach a hand to the shining orbs of night but we see with mortal sight that which for the moment carries us out of windswep prairieland.

A gifted writer penned the immortal words that time writes no wrinkles on the ocean's assured brow, such as creation's dawn beheld thou rollest now! Time writes its wrinkles on man's noble brow. Week by week The Frontier tells the story of another husband and wife who have come to their 50th wedding anniversary. Fifty years together, age now dims the vision, writes a wrinkle here and there, but out of memory's treasure store happy moments glow that still unite two souls in love and devotion.

These 16 to 25-year-old male drivers reach too great a level there are apt to be too many cars on the road without insurance.

It is true there are state laws that make this dangerous but an annual premium that is too high will cause people to close their eyes to the law and operate without insurance. Then the real danger will start.

It would be wise if the state of Nebraska investigated more deeply into the subject of suspending drivers' licenses. A fine is too often paid and forgotten; a fine plus a suspended driver's license on all auto operators would be much more effective.

For first offense speeding, make a fine and 30 days loss of license automatic; missing a stop sign, a fine and 20 days loss of driver's license, etc. Let second offense double the time of loss of driver's license until the operator is overtaken by the state "point" law and loses his license for a year or more.

Don't leave the question of license suspension up to the courts. Make it mandatory all over the state of Nebraska. Yes, it would cause many hardships but death caused by lawbreakers is the problem faced by the state.

So many of the things we once believed were eternal and unchanging have crumbled into dust, writes Bill Vaughn in the Kansas City Star. It's gratifying to hear that chocolate, vanilla and strawberry are still the popular soda fountain flavors.

As if the new motor cars weren't gaudy enough, along comes March's slush to provide the ultimate chic touch—polka dot windshields. But we love it that way!
