VALENTINE—After nearly three days of listening to financial hardship stories from high Chicago & North Western officials, the Nebraska railway commissioners late Wednesday heard seven representatives of the general public and the Save-the-Trains association.

The commission is conducting a hearing on C&NW's application to remove the last two passenger-mail-express trains serving north-Nebraska on the 450-mile Omaha-Chadron line.

Monday testimony of Stephen A. Litus, C&NW staff officer, was not admitted to the record when S-T-A counsel Einar Viren of Omaha moved that Litus was not a competent authority.

J. R. Brennan, C&NW general passenger agent, said flexibility in automobile trains 13 and 14 no longer necessary. A voluminous 50-page book contained C&NW's presentation, including population studies, auto registrations, maps of bus, truck and other rail lines. Brennan said trains 13 and 14 are among the "best-known today in the country."

The exhibit showed that C&NW's 10 passenger trains in and out of Omaha's Union station handled 49,000 passengers in 1956. In excess of 30,000 of these were on trains 13 and 14.

Other eight trains include Omaha-Minneapolis and Omaha-Chadron runs.

Shannon Responsible
C. C. Shannon, assistant to C&NW's president, admitted the road had been inefficiently operated in the past. He admitted, too, under cross-examination that when he was in charge of all Nebraska, South Dakota and Wyoming operations, headquarters in Omaha, trains 13 and 14 were under his jurisdiction, and he had encouraged removal of the trains since 1950.

Litus said his testimony had been accepted by Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Minnesota and other utility commissions.

When challenged, however, he stepped down and a hurry up phone call was sent to Larry Provo, vice-president and comptroller of the line. Provo was on the scene the next morning.

On Tuesday and Wednesday Provo pleaded hardship in behalf of the railroad but did not fully explain why C&NW's stock had nearly doubled in value in 18 months. Viren asked Provo how he reconciled the hardship story with the stock value. Viren probed as to why C&NW's stock is considerably higher on the market than other railroads which have been paying dividends to stockholders annually. C&NW hasn't paid on common stock in seven years.

'Pick-and-Shovel'
Viren's cross-examination of Provo served to neutralize in the minds of many of the listeners, the three days of "pick-and-shovel" financial condition," stressed by Litus, Shannon, Brennan and Provo.

Strongly-worded letters and petitions from north-Nebraskans were entered into the record over the protest of the road's counsel.

There is speculation the hearing may end tonight (Thursday).

State Sen. Frank Nelson of O'Neill will testify today (Thursday). He introduced the law that eliminated the flagman and saved C&NW 25- to 30-thousand-dollars annually.

O'Neill has been represented each day at the hearings.

Public witnesses heard late Wednesday were Judge Quigley of Valentine; Gene Kemper, Alliance publisher; Doyle Free, secretary of Nebraska Poultry Improvement association (eastern Nebraska hatcheries send chicks to western Nebraska by express); C. M. Terry, fieldman for the Lakeville (Minn.) Creamery, who introduced messages from scores of patrons who objected to having the express service lost; Mrs. Sattzman and Mrs. Thorley, both of Ainsworth, who use the trains frequently.
