Bench Leveling Will Be Studied

The Holt soil conservation district is sponsoring a tour to Ord Wednesday, September 18, to view contour bench leveling.

Any irrigator contemplating contour irrigation is urged to make this trip and see a field that is being irrigated by the contour bench method," C. R. ("Bob") Hill said.

The tour will depart from the court house annex at 10:30 a.m., eat dinner in Ord and then view contour irrigated fields in that area and return in time to do chores in the evening.

Meadows that have not yet been hayed, or in some cases meadows that were hayed early and have a good aftergrowth, may produce a profitable crop of bluestem and Indian grass seed. Yields of such grasses may be expected to produce about 10 pounds per acre for every seed stalk per square foot. For example, five good seed stalks per square foot would be expected to yield approximately 50 pounds of seed per acre.

Any one having possibilities of such seed harvest is urged to contact the local Soil Conservation office.

"Returns from such harvest should be more profitable than hay", Hill said.

The soil conservation office also wishes to announce a change in policy of office days. Mrs. Deane Reed has recently assumed the duties of part-time clerk.

The office will be open each afternoon Monday through Friday.
