Tax Issue Big Question

LINCOLN - Opposition forces to any drive to broaden Nebraska's tax base through a constitutional amendment are beginning to form.

The Nebraska farm bureau has charged the proposed amendment is a "blank check" to state aid for schools and expansion of state government.

Now head of a legislative council, tax violation investigation committee, Carpenter is touring the state holding hearings on tax problems, most of them alone.

He repeatedly has denied he has any intention of running for governor in the 1958 election.

The fiery Scottsbluff solon says his only desire now is to return to the legislature and push for his tax reform program, to plug loopholes in Nebraska property tax laws.

Carpenter filed early in 1957 for re-election to the legislature, representing Scotts Bluff county.

In the 1957 session, the lawmaker introduced a flock of bills, many of which hit the dust before getting to the floor or at least very far along the legislative way, after reaching the floor.

Some of course, passed after Carpenter had established himself as undisputed floor leader in the unicameral.

He undoubtedly will return loaded with suggestions, if he is re-elected. One already advanced by the senator is a special liquor tax to help care for alcoholics.

Meanwhile, Lester Anderson of Aurora, a longtime foe of a state

Nebraska Armories

The state's chief executive is concerned about the future of the national guard across the country in general and in Nebraska particularly.

Gov. Victor Anderson suggested a committee of the nation's governors get together and make a trek to Washington to see President Eisenhower and find out exactly what's in the wind.

The chief executive said there have been several cuts in size of the guard and he feels this weakens the nation's defenses.

If the national force is cut much more, the governor said, Nebraska will lose 16 guard units, which means seven or eight towns could be affected.

A year ago, Gov. Anderson said, the Nebraska guard force was cut from 4,200 to 3,823 men. He said he understands further slashes are imminent in orders to come from the Pentagon.

Drastic reductions of the guard, the governor said, would be "very serious" and probably some states would lose all their guard units.

Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Young of Ravenna were Sunday visitors at the Mrs. Austin Hynes home.

THE FRONTIER, O'Neill, Neb., Thurs., Feb. 27, 1958.—PAGE 9.

Nebraska probably would not be one of these, the governor said, but he added that wherever this happened that the state would have to form or increase the state police force to handle natural disasters such as floods, fires and tornadoes.

Sen. Terry Carpenter of Scottsbluff said he plans to be busy in the 1959 legislature if the people re-elect him.
