Conservation Group to Pick Directors

Election of three supervisors of the Holt soil and water conservation district board of directors will be held in conjunction with the annual meeting of the district and the Holt county extension service.

All Holt landowners are eligible to vote. If impossible to vote at the annual meeting, ballots may be secured at the county agent's office any time prior to that date.

District supervisors whose terms expire this year are: Elmer Allyn of Stuart, chairman; Clarence Ernst of O'Neill, and Merwyn French, sr., of Page.

Terms of these men do not expire until June 26 of this year and supervisors elected will not begin new terms until that date.

Supervisors attend at least one regular meeting a month, plus many hours of time in arranging various educational activities in Holt area, also state, regional and national meetings of the district association. Supervisors receive no salary, and the work represents a large amount of donated man hours.

Six candidates have been placed on the ballot for the three positions on the board.

Clarence Ernst lives three miles west of O'Neill. He has been a member of the board for eight years. He is also on the county board of supervisors' extension board and active in church activities at the Center Union church.

He operates 8000 acres of which he has reseeded between 180 to 200 acres and has done considerable tree planting.

Walter Fick lives eight miles southeast of Inman and operates a 2,760-acre ranch. His basic conservation ranch plan was completed this winter. He deferred about 480 acres of range last summer and is a strong advocate of the benefits of deferred grazing.

He firmly believes in 4-H club work and has been a club leader for many years. He and his son, Geary, were particularly active in range judging contests last year.

Merwyn French, sr., lives three miles northwest of Page and operates 800 acres. He has been a member of the board for four years and is treasurer of the Page Methodist church. Merwyn has had excellent success in grass seeding and tree planting. In his use of Vetch on sandy cropland, he has demonstrated more than double corn yields.

A. Max Karo, a semi-retired rancher, lives in Stuart. His son operates the 2,000-acre home ranch south of Stuart and leases an additional three sections of hay and pasture. Max is active in Stuart Community club activities.

In 1948 the Karo ranch was one of three representing the district and won both the Omaha World-Herald and Sioux City awards.

Claude Liermann lives 24 miles south of Atkinson on highway 11. He and his son operate a 2,280-acre ranch. Claude has planted trees each spring for the past 15 years and has some wonderful windbreaks and shelterbelts to show for his labor. He has used deferred grazing and blowout control practices in his ranching operations.

Elmer Vogel lives eight miles south of Stuart and operates 3,600 acres. He has done considerable grass seeding and plans to do more. His basic conservation plans was recently completed. Elmer has been following the production testing program sponsored by the extension service and feels that it, coupled with a good conservation program will aid ranching operations considerably.

As an example, he states that nearly 20 percent of his calf crop weighed over 5500 pounds last fall.

Religious Survey Starts Sunday The O'Neill Ministerial association plans a religious survey in O'Neill beginning Sunday, March 9, and it will be completed by the following Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Ronald McClellan of Omaha attended the funeral of the uncle, William Eggers, Friday, Feb. 21 and visited over the weekend with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Don McClellan, and Mrs. O. F. O'Connors.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Milnar were Feb. 23, guests of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Milnar of Atkinson. Other guests were Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Milnar and Kenneth of Stuart and Mrs. Pete Koenig of Butte.

Elkhorn Winds Like Silver Ribbon

Mrs. Dora Townsend of Page submitted to The Frontier's photo correspondent, Mrs. N. D. Ickes, sr., the accompanying photo and the following word-picture of Holt county's silvery Elkhorn river.

The article was borrowed verbatim from an early clipping in The Frontier (author unknown). The article:

Over the fertile prairies, among the hills and glens, along grassy and wildflowered banks the Elkhorn winds its way like a silver ribbon.

The wind stoops in its flight across the undulating valley, leaving a mantle of dimpled ruffles on the river's surface and scattering a benediction down from the occasional group of trees that stand upon the banks of this tinzel strand.

The prairies stretch for miles on either side and across their wide expanse through the year come floating down a thousand echoes and the fragrance of countless numbers of prairie flowers.

At times from a distant height a fleet-footed deer or antelope may be seen, or the yelp of a coyote heard to mingle with the snap of the cowboy's whip as his herd sweeps down to the river to drink of its clear and nourishing waters.

In the summer, when twilight gathers over the hill, a ruffled rail is heard from every side. Prairie chickens, with heads erect and plumes outstretched, start in lordly manner upon their native heath and with rustling wings and proudly swelling throats fill the air with reechoed boomings. In the spring sandhill cranes, whose forms float up toward the heavens, circle slowly over the river, their occasional cries sounding faint and far off as if a spirit world, in the autumn jack rabbits scamper through the dead grasses and, by their speed, plot to shame the fleetest of dogs.

On the dead limb of a tree the yellow hammer sits in grave contemplation and above him the woodpecker beats a steady tattoo that the enlivens the heart of the horny-handed agriculturalist.

The river glides smoothly along, and hardly a ripple is heard from its placid current. So still and regular it flows that it seems as if a spell had been laid upon the water. Although the echoes and voices whisper morning and evening to its listening spirit the river moves noiselessly along with hardly a murmur in response. It is the type of all that is grace and beauty—the queen of rivers.

Repose is written in the air above and around it and peace
