STATE CAPITOL NEWS Fluoride in Water Problem Gets Notice

LINCOLN—Will the question of whether to add fluoride to municipal water systems ever be solved?

But, in some cases, nature has solved the problem for a community—often with many citizens unaware of it. The state health department said that at least 14 cities have as much natural fluoride in drinking water as recommended for adding by the artificial method.

These Nebraska cities—Fairbury, Nebraska City and Superior—add fluoride to the water artificially.

The state health board was asked to confine mobile x-ray units to adults, eliminating high schools and colleges.

There are fewer aged getting aid from the state now than at the same time in 1957.

That's the report of the state board of public welfare. It reported 16,567 cases on the rolls.
