Alaskan School to Graduate First Class
 LYNCH—Maynard Lundberg, a missionary at Unalakleet, Alaska, writes members of the Lundberg family in a "round-robin" letter stating the spring has been "unusually warm" with the mercury in the thirties for several weeks. He declares that the mission work in which his wife is also active, keeps them very busy. They have a mission school, children's home and have recently installed a broadcasting station in Nome, Alaska. The high school the Lundbergs started four years ago will graduate the first class of seniors this spring.
 Mrs. Lundberg teaches health in high school and teaches music to a dozen students. She also assists in nursing especially when the village nurse is called to visit other population centers. At the time the letter was written, a number of native missionary pastors were planning a conference to outline next year's work.
 The Lundbergs have four children, who enjoy sleigh riding with picnic lunches.
 He writes, "It doesn't seem to bother the children to sit on a cake of ice and eat picnic lunch." Maynard is remembered as the youngest son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Peter Lundberg. He attended the Pleasant View rural school north of Lynch and graduated from the Bristow high school.
