Predict Uniform Interstate Speed

11-Mile Construction Progresses

LINCOLN—The 1959 legislature probably will have several matters to settle concerning the interstate highway in Nebraska.
The road is taking form between Omaha and Lincoln where 11 miles are under construction. State Engineer L. N. Riss terms progress of building "Very satisfactory."
Riss' engineer has driven over a portion of the highway where contractors are pouring 24-foot wide strips of pavement at about 3,000 feet per day.

There are two immediate problems connected with this road that may require legislation as it expands westward across Nebraska.

1. What to do about speed limits which can be higher because of the straightness and other safety factors of the route.

2. The problem of erection of billboards along the right-of-way.

Whether there should be a restriction on establishing businesses on access routes to the interstate is another matter that came up in the 1957 unicameral but didn't make the grade.

Riss believes that current speed limits of 65 in daytime and 55 at night will work on the interstate until longer stretches of road are constructed.

Then, the engineer commented, there will have to be an increase in the interstate limit. To provide uniformity and in case of talking by an individual state, Riss said, the federal government will move in to settle the question.

This can be done since it is footing 90 percent of the bill and the route generally is considered a defense highway.

On the problem of billboards along the interstate, Riss said the federal government would pay 1 1/2 percent of the cost if the state would purchase an additional 500 feet of access route to the interstate to prevent signs from going up.

But Riss said this would be impractical in populated areas. And he added, there are enough legal loopholes to permit businesses now in operation to set signs.

In the legislature, there was a move made to limit construction of businesses on access routes close to an interchange — a point where you get on and off the interstate.

But the bill was axed. Now, the highway department purchases enough land at an interchange which it says is required for safety reasons, so as to prevent construction of establishments in the immediate vicinity of the interchange.

Small Schools — The dilemma of the small school continues.

In Lincoln, district court injunctions—sought by six small high schools—were granted Tuesday, they can operate for another year.

The schools, at Bristow, Farwell, Petersburg, Swanton, Reynolds and Ong, were among 20 put on the non-approved list by the state department of education, which said they could no longer collect the free high school tuition levy which forms a substantial part of their operating revenue. Normally, non-approval by the department closes a small school.

Non-approval is a designation given by the department when it feels the educational level is not what it should be.

There is no end immediately in sight, unless it be court action, to the problem of the marginal schools here are problems in keeping it open and headaches when it closes.

The education department claims a marginal school does not have financial resources to get the kind or quantity of teachers needed, and because of its border-line monetary condition, adequate courses are not offered.

On the other hand a member of the small school group typified his claims he got his education in the high school and there was nothing wrong with that. Further, he brings up the problem of transporting children several miles to another school, often with real problems involved.

Small school backers are now circulating petitions to get the state commissioner of education post back as an elective position. The commissioner now is appointed by the elected state board of education.

The small school people feel they have no practical way to express their feelings—such as at the polls—when a matter as touchy as the marginal school becomes a major issue.

State officials conversely, claim the people only recently authorized the appointment of the commissioner and legally, an elected official would not have to follow rules of an elected board, when both were aimed at serving the same department.

This, claim the state officials, could lead to administrative confusion.

CB&Q Gets Authority to Reduce Service

The Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railroad Wednesday, June 25, was authorized by the Nebraska state railway commission to discontinue three times weekly roundtrip freight service between Ferry Junction (near South Sioux City) and O'Neill, and to substitute the following service:
Two times per week roundtrip service between Ferry and O'Neill and, in addition, one roundtrip weekly between Ferry and Osmund.

In effect this means Plainview, Brunswick, Royal, Orchard, Page and O'Neill will have one less roundtrip weekly CB&Q service than heretofore. Plainview and O'Neill each have twice weekly additional freight service by Chicago & North Western.

Because of a bridge loss years ago between Randolph and Carroll, C&NW tracks between those towns are being torn up. Trains on the Emerson-Bloomfield branch now move from Emerson to Laurel and C&NW Laurel-Randolph on Burlington tracks, Randolph to Bloomfield, and return.

The Emerson-Crofton and Emerson-Bloomfield branches are lines of the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha railroad which is now a part of C&NW.

The C&NW won commission authority to pay cattle owners at Ewing, Atkinson, Crawford, Gordon, Norfolk, Rushville and Valentine $1.50 per carload when the owners loaded and unloaded their own cattle.

In other business the commission granted Don G. Higgins of the Higgins air service at Ainsworth authority to service the municipal airport there with limousine service.
