Full Scale Blowup on Power Scene

Might Go to Hands of Lawmakers

LINCOLN - State government circles are buzzing again with a full scale blow-up on the public power scene.

The latest hassle raises the possibility that the complex and politically-explosive subject could wind up in the legislature next year.

The lawmakers traditionally have shied away from the power issue. But some observers feel the problem might be hard to avoid in the coming session.

Setting off the flare-up was the continuing quest of which power agency will build a heavy transmission line from Ft. Randall dam in South Dakota to a load center in Nebraska.

After all agencies had agreed to the line being built by the Nebraska Electric Generation and Transmission cooperative. This arrangement was abruptly objected to by the Loup River Public Power district.

Also involved was a proposal by Loup to make far-reaching changes in the whole power arrangement. This was in a resolution, Loup proposed to: 1. Withdraw from the Nebraska Public Power System...

Conservation Tools - Two new organizational aids for soil and water conservation in Nebraska have been put to use. Both result from state legislature passed last year. They are: -Appointment by Gov. Anderson at a watershed planning board for the Big Blue River Valley, the first such body in the state.

Planning boards are designed to do extensive flood control and conservation planning over a large area, involving several counties. Conservancy districts will provide the machinery to apply intensive conservation measures on a watershed basis.

In forming two conservancy districts, Nebraskaans for the first time, have in effect, agreed to tax themselves specifically for soil and water conservation work. Among the powers of such districts are levying up to two mills in taxes, condemning land, hiring technical personnel and contracting to build dams and other structures.

Mr. and Mrs. Lester Riege and daughter, Bonnie, returned Wednesday, July 23 from a trip to Colorado. At Ft. Collins they visited a sister of Mr. Riege.

hearing was an apparent lack of understanding on listing of railroad stock. Several of those appearing said they had been informed Union Pacific stock is not taxed as a domesticated foreign corporation.

Herrington explained that the law states that railroad stock is taxable even though the corporation is domesticated.

The tax commissioner indicated that the Adams county case is just the beginning of a major effort to get more complete listing of intangible property for tax purposes.

The incentive to list all intangibles, in the form of a penalty, could force an errant taxpayer to hand over 15 or 20 times as much in tax as he would had he listed all his stocks and bonds.

Key to the Loup proposal is the "unified, integrated system." Loup officials explain this is intended to take the charge of the full transmission system and generating plants now owned by the Loup-Platte partnership in the NPPS.

Whatever the answer, officials felt sure it would require some legislative action. The big problem for the districts now appears to be agreeing on a new arrangement so that a major controversy can be avoided in the legislature.

On the ever-boiling Nebraska tax front, Tax Commissioner Fred Herrington has made it plain that anyone caught omitting stocks and bonds from personal schedules will be slapped with a penalty.

Dorseyites Caught in Downpour

DORSEY-Rain, but no one had to swim. Residents in the Dorsey area had from one inch to 1.75 inches Saturday night. The rain fell so fast that it caused considerable washing. There was no hail. Many of the patrons were caught in the downpour on their way to town to do their Saturday shopping. Visibility was zero at times, as the rain came down so fast roads were transformed into a sheet of water. In Lynch the water was running curb full and in places over. This area has received nearly seven inches of rain for July.
