Nebraska One of Six Lagging

LINCOLN—What's the status of the interstate highway in Nebraska? This question came into the spotlight after a national magazine article said Nebraska is one of six states that is lagging in construction.

State Engineer L. N. Ress was asked for the facts on construction progress in Nebraska. He said that the interstate highway under construction there are 17 miles of the four-lane super highway under construction now, between Omaha and Lincoln. Six miles are completed, between Omaha and Gretna.

A $40-million construction program for the interstate highway, is blueprinted for Nebraska during the 1957-59 period. About $15-million is under contract and $10 million more will be let this year.

Ress said the information in the article is erroneous. The article said Nebraska, West Virginia, Wisconsin, South Dakota, Montana and Idaho are having difficulty matching the required 10 percent of the cost of the highway.

That was true only at the start of the program, Ress said, and no longer is the case in Nebraska because the 1957 legislature upped the gasoline tax one cent per gallon.

Wet weather set the program back this year but it is proceeding at top speed, the engineer said. He expects travel over the Omaha to Lincoln route in 1960.

Remainder of the route beyond Lincoln has not yet been announced, since it still is under study, Ress added.

County Speed Limits—The difficult problem of what to do about the mounting death toll on county roads in Nebraska got into politics momentarily.

Ralph Brooks, democratic candidate for governor, and Party Chairman Russell Hanson of Newburg said Gov. Victor Anderson should set lower speed limits on county roads.

But Deputy Atty. Gen. Clarence A. H. Meyer said the governor and county officials do not have authority to raise or lower speed limits.

That, Meyer said in an opinion to Governor Anderson, is a function reserved to the legislature and somewhat to the highway department where road hazards are involved.

State Engineer L. N. Ress said the highway department does not have the personnel to devote time to analyze the some 100,000 miles of county roads in Nebraska to determine the safe maximum speeds.

Liquor and Gasoline—Taxes from liquor and gasoline brought $4,372,408 into state coffers during August.

Liquor revenue totaled $275,508, as compared with $247,122 for a month earlier.

Gasoline accounted for $4,096,900, as against $3,796,267 for July. So far this year, liquor has brought in $2,077,873, which goes to the state's general fund—main operating account. The gasoline tax total is $25,684,380, divided among counties, cities, the state highway department, and refunded to farmers and dealers.

Education Money—The state board of education temporarily postponed deciding whether Nebraska should participate in a federal aid to education program.

Nebraska could get $325,534 in federal funds of which $152,623 would go for teaching and equipment and would require local matching, and $43,560 for vocational education.

Members of the board questioned whether participating in the program would mean that eventually the federal government would dictate what should be taught in classrooms and books that should be used. Others said federal spending must stop somewhere and federal aid to education is as good a place as any.

ministered through the state, $43,779, matched 50-50. Area vocational educational programs, $43,560, 50-50 state or local matching.

Air Service—Local airline service in Nebraska is slated to begin October 1 across the northern part of the state.

State Aeronautics Director Roland Harr says Frontier Airlines will begin service on the day from Omaha to Casper, Wyo., with stops at Lincoln, Norfolk, Chadron and Ainsworth and Douglas and Lusk in Wyoming.

Frontier officials, Harr reports, will address civic clubs along the northern route outlining advantages of using the new air service.

Formal approval by the civil aeronautics board of an air network providing 17 Nebraska cities will be looking for the first time, twice-daily round trip service among the localities.
