The 1959 Lincoln... classic design consistency by retaining its clean, long, low sweeping lines. The Lincoln is now on display at the Lohaus Motor company here — O'Neill's Ford-Mercury-Lincoln dealer.

'59 Lincoln Retains Clean, Long Lines

Classic styling refinements marked with conservative and clean lines enhance the appearance of the 1959 Lincoln now on display at the Lohaus Motor company showroom here.

Front and rear grilles are restyled and more steel sculpture has been added to the profile. Continental has added two new models—a limousine and a town car.

Lincoln has continued with its unitized construction for 1959 in a plant at Wixom, Mich., especially designed for this type of automotive operations 14 months ago.

Lincoln and Continental are the only cars in the fine car field to use the integrated body construction method. This permits tighter fitting doors, roomier interiors and greater torsional rigidity or resistance to body twisting effects. Body rust proofing, both inside and out, is done by immersing the whole body nearly 18 inches in a paint tank.

The new Lincoln profile is almost two inches shorter than last year's but remains big in appearance. Clean, long, low lines are accentuated in the front by a sculptured steel design extending from the front wheel area into the front door. The sweep of line is continued by a chrome spear along the side. A tasteful applique brightens the rear quarter panel.

A new front wraparound bumper protects a new one-piece grille. The rear view continues to be impressive in size but the lines merge quietly into a restrained word Lincoln is printed. The rear bumper and lower deck moulding form an oval shape and enclose the textured grille that houses integrated running and stop lights at either end. Rectangular back-up lights are placed at the inner side of the taillights. The fuel filler opening is blended into the center of the grille.

Extensive scientific research by Lincoln engineers and the use of specially designed testing equipment have made the 1959 Lincoln one of the quietest running automobiles on the American highway.

Two basic aims of unitized construction in the Lincoln and Continental are strength and silence.

The story of strength lies in the fact that the body and frame are integrated into one massive piece of welded steel components. More than 10,000 welds add strength to the all steel body. More important, these welds permit the maintenance of closer tolerances for tighter door fits and eliminate any body movements that contribute to noise.
