CONSUMERS...

Continuously Alert to Warn of Storms and Repair Storm Damage

Newest "weapons" in Consumers "arsenal" against storms are two 300-kilowatt mobile power generating units. Strategically based, the units can be moved quickly to any area in the state to provide emergency power until normal service can be restored.

When tornadoes or severe thunderstorms are spotted, Consumers Public Power District's state-wide warning system goes into action. Communities in the path of danger are alerted through local Civil Defense and law enforcement agencies.

When a storm strikes, Consumers crews move at once, by day or night, into the affected area to restore electric service and assist in every other possible way. Men and machines, mobilized from the entire state, if necessary, work around the clock until service is restored.
