in north Holt county in the district.

Further ditching (on the land of the farmer) would have to be financed by the farmer himself and any other improvement necessary to keep the major share of his farm under the ditch irrigation.

A local group of farmers would administer the district and watch over the maintenance and operating costs. A fee would have a right to the use of these bridges and provisions would be made to pay them a fair price for that portion of the land used by the canal.

IRRIGATION STORY

Sub canals and laterals would be supplied at Reclamation Bureau cost to the site of the farms of from $6 to $11 per acre per year would be the cost to the farmer depending upon how well adapted his land is for irrigation.

The Bureau has divided the land in the irrigable areas in three classes, 1, 2, and 3. Owners of the best land (class 1) would pay the most per acre for the use of the water (which includes operating and maintenance costs) owners of class 2 land less, etc.
