An Industry That Takes "Time Out" To Be Courteous

Ever have a flat tire or run out of gas miles from a service station and have a truck driver stop to help you?

If so, you understand perfectly what is meant when it's said that the trucking industry is an industry that takes "time out" to be courteous. And it's plain to see, too, why truck drivers are often referred to as gentlemen of the highways.

Courtesy is one of a number of basic subjects given top billing in truck driver training programs all over America. In addition to helping stranded motorists, it involves the conscientious use of signals, giving the other fellow the right of way, maintaining the proper mental attitude.

The industry's emphasis on courtesy and safe driving practices helps explain the splendid safety record of the nation's over-the-highway truck drivers.
