Letters to the Editor

I see by the paper that State Education Commissioner Decker opened his mouth and put his foot into it again last week. It's a neat trick and he seems to be adept at it.

He said in essence that Nebraska senators are not just too bright when it comes to educational matters. He seemed to be irked because he finds it difficult to get any of them to introduce his educational bills and then stand up to the fight that ensues on the floor of the unicameral.

I wonder if the gentleman ever thought that the trouble might possibly be his proposed bills and not the intelligence of balking senators. Senators are quite adept at keeping their mouths shut and their feet on the floor. There is a vast difference in "wants" of educators and "needs" of the state's educational system. If senators and others of the common herd were to put much credence in the ballyhoo of educators of our schools' deficiencies we would be prone to think every kid in Nebraska would develop into a stupid moron because they did not have marble palaces equipped with ivory towers in which to study and recite. One time we heard Dr. Decker give the graduating address at Schuyler High School. As the proletriat were walking out a local lawyer was heard to remark, "Well, he might be educated but he has retained very little education. You know there is a difference." Could this be Mr. Decker's stumbling block with the senators? He didn't have the perception to see it then—perhaps he doesn't have the insight to see it now.

There are times when I feel educators have climbed to a level so high above the very children they are trying to educate that very little knowledge ever seeps down to the child that should benefit from learning. The higher the educators climb the harder it is to look down and see the bottom of the ladder.

The knowledge that is finally imparted to a child comes from a conscientious teacher who sees, knows and does something about the actual educational problems that face children in a local community. He or she has passed on an inspired revised version of what they were expected or demanded to teach.

If we believe everything we hear or read we would be brainwashed into thinking that the only ones who have any knowledge of what education should be, how it should be administered, what it should cost, or who should rule the educational roost, are those who hold certain secretarial positions or have a PH.D. tacked on to their names.

I might be wrong but I seem to keep going back to high school graduates I have known who can't read intelligently, spell correctly, write legibly or add a four column set of figures and get the same answer twice after spending 13 years in our public schools. Maybe our senators, who also got their education in our schools and encounter our high school graduates, don't feel that Mr. Decker and his cohorts have demonstrated their educational leadership ability to any outstanding degree.

Educators seem to have the bit in their teeth and are running wide the past eight or ten years. The common folks are slowly getting their heads in the wind and are sniffing the cross currents in education. The negative vote on school building programs across the state is evidence of the common herd's displeasure with educational concepts being forced on their children over and above their spoken protests.

Maybe unicalameral senators have heard grass roots rumbling and are fearful the folks back home might get the bit in their teeth come election if they go along too far with spend-happy educationalists.

Respectfully
Florence Boettcher

Frenches Tell Of Christmas In Africa

PAGE—Mr. and Mrs. Merwyn French sr., have received a letter from their son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Carroll French and daughter, Kirsten, of the Katanga Mission in the Belgian Congo, Africa, telling of their Christmas celebration and big game hunting.

Carroll is an agricultural missionary there and his wife is head of the woman's division of the hospital. The Frenches were married there and their daughter was born at the Congo Mission.

Difficulty in covering distance there seems to add safety to the family as Carroll is not too concerned over danger although Katanga province has been the center of much internal conflict.

In one of his letters he writes of playing host to a Belgian and an African since there was not room at the government post. The two men over there in the interest of locating diamonds. Carroll's description of his buffalo hunt tells of his hunting party of 10 carriers traveling over rough country, "similar to the Royal area except for the lack of farming acres—only grass and more rainfall to make the valleys more dense with vegetation." Carroll's party shot and wounded two buffalo but the dangers of tracking a wounded buffalo made it impossible to locate one of the animals. They took home four legs and flets from the other buffalo, distributing the rest of the meat to the hunters and carriers.

The Frenches are due for a furlough in June and they plan to take further education courses in their line of work while on leave.

Her bouquet, into which she twined a silver corsage, was fashioned of a spray of lilies of the valley and blue iris and centered with a white orchid.

Miss Jean Littlejohn was maid of honor for her sister, while bridesmaids were their younger sister, Marilyn, Miss Gayle Cummings and Miss Fran Deanna. They wore identical gowns of sapphire blue peau de soie made with portrait neckline and fitted bodice. The puffed bell-bouffant skirt was cut with short back drape and accented with a bow at the waist. Their headpieces were of white fur and they carried white fur muffs centered with sprays of blue and white carnations.

William Barber served as best man. Ushering were the bride's brother, George R. Littlejohn, William Gonzalo and Doug Doweard.

Four-hundred guests attended the reception at the Casa de las Flores. Receiving with Mr. and Mrs. Littlejohn and the bridegroom's father, Neil Ryan, was Mrs. Bonnie Waldo. A buffet supper at the Littlejohn residence attended by relatives followed and later the couple departed on their honeymoon in the car his father gave them as a wedding present. After a week at a Southern California ski-resort and a few days in Palm Springs, the couple returned to Los Angeles to make their home at 9624 Belvedere Apartment 2.

The new Mrs. Ryan, who has lived her entire life in San Carlos was graduated from Notre Dame high school, and attended College of San Mateo, before becoming a United Airlines stewardess.
