

Council Names Delegates to State Meeting

The Holt County Extension council met Friday in O'Neill and was called to order by the County Chairman, Mrs. A. T. Crumly, Page.

Ethel Saxton, district supervisor of home agents, was present and discussed program work for the Extension club. Extension service is part of the state university for all people, not just those who are on the campus, as the work is carried on through local Extension clubs and is available to all who take part.

Delegates to the State Extension council meeting to be held in Lincoln September 20 and 21 were elected: Mrs. Jack McGrew, Stuart; Mrs. Leo Kramer, Atkinson; and Mrs. William Crawford, Chambers, was elected first alternate and Mrs. J. L. Pruden, second alternate.

The Council voted to present a sewing book, "Unit Method of Sewing" to the boys girls in each division of 4-H style review.

The following goals, demonstrations, and special projects were accepted by the council for the year of 1962: Goals: (1) Improved home sewing; (2) More family interests and special projects; (3) Improved family nutrition; (4) Support of Diabetic Camp; (5) Support of Halsey 4-H camp. Demonstrations: (1) The good egg; (2) Fabric selection for beauty and quality; (3) Window treatment; (4) Home and garden protection; and (5) Your kitchen cabinets.

Specials: (1) County-wide May Tea - smorgasbord; (2) Freezing fruits and vegetables; (3) Workshop - remaking, repairing, mending and simple alterations; (4) Landscaping; (5) Emergency Day - coping with the teenager to be topic for a speaker; and (6) Christmas activity - to be decided later.

Suggested Crops For Planting Following Hail

Many Holt county farmers suffered loss of crops through hail damage this summer and in some cases recovery power of corn has been aided through different measures.

A. Neil Dawes, County Extension agent, has prepared a statement concerning the recovery ability, and the suggested emergency crops which might replace the destroyed crops even this late in the season. Following is his statement concerning these subjects.

A nine-year study of various degrees of hail damage inflicted on corn by artificial hail treatments was conducted at Lincoln a few years ago. A total of 40 treatments differing in kind, severity and time of application were compared as to their effect on the crop.

Plants cut off one-inch above the ground when they were eight inches high yielded 67% as much as untreated plants. This compares to a 32% yield when stalks were cut off after they reached a height of 16 inches. At 16 inches tall the growing point was cut off and any new growth was limited to tillers or suckers.

Compared with untreated plants the average yield of all yields was 84%; three feet tall, 55%; four feet tall 18%; when the first tassels appeared 1%; in full tassels 6%; 10 days after silking, 25%; early milk stage 48% and late milk stage 71%. It is apparent that the greatest harm from loss of leaves is during the tasseling period.

Retention of half the leaf area at all stages of growth resulted in grain yields varying from 70% to 86% of untreated plants. Severe hail bruising at tasseling time reduced yields by 54%.

Suggested replacement crops are as follows: Proso (Hog Millet) is the grain type millet which usually matures in 60-70 days. The grain is readily eaten by all classes of livestock and has a feeding value of equal to barley. Difficulty in marketing the grain may be experienced if it is not to be fed on the farm as there is no country market for most other grains.

Yields have averaged about 1100 lb/a in western Nebraska on dryland tests. Early Fortune is one of the more common varieties. The planting rate is 18-25 pounds per acre drilled or 5-6 pounds per acre in 40 inch rows.

Buckwheat requires a growing season of 10-12 weeks so may or may not mature before frost in northern Nebraska. It makes its best growth in a cool moist climate. Buckwheat is valuable as a livestock feed for all types of livestock and also for making flour. Yields up to 40 bu/a have been obtained in Nebraska in certain seasons. Buckwheat is usually drilled in solid stands at the rate of 3-4 pecks per acre. The usual procedure for harvesting is to use a wind rower and combine.

Sudangrass offers one of the best chances for a forage crop before killing frost. The crop can be used for pasture, hay or silage, even though it does not fully mature. Because of drought in the Dakotas it is quite possible that hay of any kind will find a market next winter. Sudan is seeded with a drill at the rate of 15-25 lbs/a.

Early natural forage sorghums or dual purpose sorghums can make considerable growth if the remainder of the season is favorable. Early Sumac, Rancher, Fremont, Ellis and Leoti are forage varieties that will reach the bloom stage in about 70 days and soon after would be suitable for bundle feed or silage. Improved Coes from Colorado and Dual from South Dakota are early maturing dual purpose varieties which can be planted at the rate of 4-6 lbs/a. Rye or rye-vetch mixtures offer a good choice for those who desire fall and spring pasture. If allowed to grow next spring this is also an excellent green manure crop which may save on nitrogen costs in 1962. The rye-vetch mixture is usually seeded at the rate of 1 bushel of rye and 15 pounds of vetch per acre. The Madison variety of vetch should be used.

Sweet Clover planted now should make a good deal of fall growth and a good green manure crop. Rape might be good for a small pasture.
