Homemakers Corner . . .

Just once more, lets talk about cooking out of doors. There are still several weeks ahead for picnics and parties in the backyard. A barbecue or cookout, as close to the kitchen as the backyard patio, or as far away as the state park or mountains, is becoming more popular each year. As a casual get-together, it is a wonderful way to let everyone from 2 to 80 into the act. And, if those supplying the food have a little "know how", it is even better.

The menu must always fit the occasion. Keep it simple and serve foods easy to handle. Meat, a salad, one or two vegetables if it's a dinner, a bread and a dessert make ample fare for any barbecue.

A backyard or patio barbecue is the easiest of all since it is usually handy to the kitchen facilities. But to keep your trips to the kitchen at a minimum, here are some suggestions.

1. Prepare everything possible ahead of time. Store food in airtight containers, aluminum foil or plastic bags until ready to use.
2. Casserole or heatproof dishes are just the thing for hot potato salad and other accompaniments. Keep them warm on the side of the barbecue unit.
3. Use a clothes basket to cart out all equipment in one trip.
4. When serving a large group, keep one bowl of each food in reserve for "seconds". At a buffet for 25 or more, put 2 small bowls or platters of each food on the table, instead of 1 large one. Serve from both sides of the table.

A park or roadside barbecue is always controlled by the amount of equipment you can transport and the immediate facilities. Here are some suggestions for away from home barbecue.

1. Keep hot foods hot and cold foods cold. For short trips, heatproof dishes taken out of the oven just before leaving and wrapped in layers of newspaper keep food surprisingly hot.
 2. Use small portable iceboxes or vacuum jugs. If you have a freezer at home, freeze the meat and let it thaw on the way. Tuck packages of frozen foods between other foods to keep them cool.
 3. Individual foil-wrapped packages may be cooked directly on the coals and served to the guests.
- Following are the directions for barbecuing chicken on your grill.
- Chicken or Turkey (Broiler Size)
 - Salt
 - Pepper
 - Butter or margarine
1. Cut poultry into halves or quarters.
 2. Wipe meat with a dry cloth.
 3. Brush meat with melted fat, season with salt and pepper.
 4. Place on grill, skin side up.
