Prairieland Talk

"Will We Meet Again?"

By ROMAINE SAUNDERS, 411) South 51st St., Lincoln 6, Nebr.

Mose Elliott, Hank Tomlinson, John Addison, H. R. Henry, Jack Bluebaugh, George B. Little, Barrett Scott - these of the Mineola, Dorsey and Scottville communities of northeast Holt county now no more of the land of the living, yes, gone to the abode of the dead to which mankind for ever marches. I saw at least one of them dressed for the grave and laid to rest, that one being John Addison. And a sister of John's was a sister-in-law of Prairieland Talker. And one of that group, Barrett Scott, met a sad end of life at the end of a rope tied to the Whiting bridge at the river marking the northern boundary of Holt county. They are dead. Will we meet them again in a better land than this?

. . . When not bumming around over these United States he and she are at home in their fine large farm house located on their farm of many acres of rich corn growing lands in southeast Nebraska. Not a horse, not a cow, or pig or chicken about the barn or other farm buildings. And he, the farm owner works at times as a hired man for the real farmer who rents his land. So with his earnings as a hired man, his share of the crops grown and social security each month he and she keep the wolf from the door.

Plenty of rain here in Prairieland this summer, and down there where this hasbeen once lived and sat on the mowing machine it is most too wet today to put up hay. Down Lincoln way in the "corn belt" crops are about the best ever.

Daughter writes that the days are hot in Florida where she and Harold are vacationing but they go to the ocean side to rest in the shade and see the waters of the great ocean roll to shore. But the pleasures of life are brief and in another week will be home at the old jobs again.

The married woman should retain her family maiden name. Mae Smith takes as her husband a man named Mills. She should then be known as Mrs. Mae Smith Mills.

I regret to learn that my good friend and former neighbor, Mr. Bly of Swan precinct is sick and in a hospital over at Sioux City. Trust he will soon recover and be up again.

My son Romaine from the Los Angeles, Calif., community spent the weekend with me recently while on an airplane flight to a New England state on business. One afternoon he and his brother, Ned, took off on a trip to Holt county to visit friends and the scenes of their youthful days when at home with mother and dad some 22 miles south of Atkinson, at Atkinson, Amelia and Chambers they visited. Romaine was to be up in New England a few days, then park in an airplane at New York City and fly home again to give wife and the two little girls each a kiss for me.

I recall today ten boys and girls from O'Neill households that learned the printers trade back in the 1880s and 90s. Six of the ten were boys, four girls. And out of this group four young typograph artists became editors and publishers of newspapers. One O'Neill printer boy ended his days as a printer in the government printing plant in Washington, D. C. Only two of the group of ten are alive yet

A wild stormy night but morning comes calm and bright. So we head along life's way another day intending to behave ourselves.

Are there any friends of the long ago out there to the northeast of town today in the "Michigan Settlement" as we knew it. Pioneers who came from that state and settled on homesteads side by side. There were the Murphys, the Hanleys, the Dwyers, the Sullivans, Mike Carroll, the grandparents of J. D. and Francis Cronin and their sister, and a few other "Michiganers". Maybe a few sons and daughters of the Sullivans and Murphys still

J. P. Mann was the leading merchant in O'Neill for a number of years in the 1880's and 1890's. He and John Hecker were in partnership for a time and then Hecker left for other parts. Mr. Mann continued the business until he turned the store management over to his sister and he left for the great city of Chicago, married and launched into business in that city. But memories of life in O'Neill lingered. So as age laid a halting hand on J. P. he returned to O'Neill and the Mann store then here no more. The last time I saw J. P., some time in the 1930's he was walking on aged and uncertain feet coming from his home on east Douglas street coming down town; we greeted and had a brief street visit.

Shout About Your "Fat Mice"

We never fail to get a chuckle out of that famous old limerick that goes something like this:

"A diner once dining at Crewe Found a great, fat mouse in his stew,

Said the waiter, don't shout and wave it about

Or the rest will be wanting one too." Luckily the waiter was a man of the world -the advertising world that is - and he knew what bally hoo can do.

On second reading we see more than just a chuckle in that limerick for hidden in its lines is a common truth about human nature and that is the desire to get for one's self the thing that seems new and desirable for the other fellow - even though it be a big fat mouse in his stew. So valid is this human emotion that the whole present day setup of advertising is based on its understanding and we find ourselves buying everything advertised from backvard grills to electric golf carts, from pop-ups to squirt-outs, from Bermuda shorts for one and all to liquid suntan and false eyelashes.

The advertising just shows us "the mouse" and that's enough.

It's true, of course, that all things advertised are not fantastic. Indeed the everyday needs get the same boost. Right here in O'Neill everything from tires and groceries to clothing and fertilizer are advertised each week in The Frontier. Through the columns of The Frontier the wares of the merchants, their prices and locations are brought to the attention of the buying public.

Here from our Frontier office we "shout and wave it about". The word spreads from one buyer to another and honest merchandise finds a ready market - even a fat mouse might fill some need in an old maid's cat. But remember, that if you're in business and fairly loaded with "big fat mice" they will simply die on your hands if you don't wave them about.

Here is where The Frontier can be of real service to both seller and buyer. We "shout and wave" any first class article and sure as shootin' you'll find your buyer. BJR article to the cost of the Peace Corps. This runs to about $9,000 a year for each of the corpsmen. By way of contrast, many of the church-supported missionary groups operate for as little as $2,000 a year for each man and woman they send abroad.

The comparison, Mr. Taylor learned, is not absolute. But even if the private cost figure were doubled, it would still be less than half of the Peace pay every penny."

HILLSBORO, ORE., ARGUS: "Historian may well list inadequate depreciation as a major factor contributing to the decline of our industrial facilities unless the attuation is remedied. American industries have been lagging for some time in the necessary plant expenditures for new equipment. Certainly a more liberal and realistic tax depreciation will stimulate a more favorable climate for industrial

Columnist Henry J. Taylor recently devoted an

Mr. Taylor is not critical of the work or the objective of the Corps. Nor does he blame it for the relatively high cost of fielding its people. But he does say this: "Regardless of the merit in any service, the government machine itself contains an invisible ax that automatically chops the taxpayers' dollars into dollarettes. The government's currency rotating process passes the people's tax money through a sieve of government overhead that drains off more of its value all the time . . . This is why, in terms of human welfare, it's important to debunk political propaganda claiming 'the government can do it better' whenever men and women can do what needs to be done by their own associations. When politicians so often (and profitably) insist 'the government' should do something-like medicare-where is the money coming from? We

And this is why, Mr. Taylor could have added, the welfare state is at best a snare and delusion, and at worst a plain fraud. It represents a system of gradual impoverishment of the people, to the ultimate weakening of the welfare of all.

YV E'LL ADMIT, we're pretty big. We have to be to do the job that Nebraska business and industry and agriculture demands of us. And so it's probably too much to hope, even in the midst of all this traffic, that we won't be noticed.

We're just bound to be. All these big road construction projects, doing a job that the nation urgently needs . . . and for which our dollars and yours are paying . . . just complicate things even more—temporarily, at least.

But you can be sure we'll do everything we can to help keep traffic moving smoothly. safely, and at reasonable speed. Our co-operative Safety Patrol is on the job watching truck behavior, and reporting to company HQ on good and bad drivers. Association and company safety men are working to develop better, safer driving habits.

Overcrowded roads call for patience and good driving. We'll strive for both, and you can be sure the best of us-and that's most of us-will lean over backward to make your trips pleasanter.
