ROYAL—The four boys shown in this picture found the bones of a buffalo skull while wading in the head waters of the Verdigris creek two and one-half miles northeast of Royal. They dug out as many pieces as they could and carried them to town where they have been busy assembling the parts with the aid of a picture from a well-known magazine. Thus far they have assembled the upper part of the head. There were five boys in the search, Nolan Rundquist, Martin Waterman, Dean Ennen, August Waterman and George Waterman. George was absent when the picture was taken. The boys haven't found a glue that will hold satisfactorily, but they are still at work. All are junior high students, ages 10 and 11 years.
