School Board, Citizens Plan Action on Building Program

O'Neill School board members and their Citizens Committee Tuesday night came to a firm agreement on the procedure for starting action on a new high school.

Specifically the agreement was: That the school board take immediate steps to acquire extra land in amounts deemed necessary and to start with the west portion of the old fairgrounds now owned by Dr. F. J. Kubitschek; and

That the school board plan to build a six-year high school on the site now occupied by the athletic field; and

That the school board contact the architect now building the school at Creighton and consult with him regarding the O'Neill needs; and

That the board build a school on the order of the one now under construction at Creighton.

These recommendations were made by the citizens committee at a joint meeting of the two groups.

At the outset of the meeting Citizens Committee Chairman Ben Gillespie asked John Watson to read a report that had been submitted to the school board some months earlier. The report contained some of the same recommendations the board accepted Tuesday night.

Citizens committee members expressed dissatisfaction with the architect now in the school board's employ and suggested that the board seriously consider a different type building than that drawn by the architect.

School Board President Henry Lohaus told the group that the problem is to determine site, size and type of building need here in O'Neill.

In response to a question from the floor Supt. H. L. McCoy said the Creighton building was engineered to accommodate 275-300 students, a size that was deemed inadequate for O'Neill. Best estimates based on projections for 1964 school attendance called for a school that will accommodate 350-400 students at O'Neill.

Dr. G. R. Cook read a prepared statement in which he said, "It has been openly suggested that the school board is deliberately trying to force acceptance of their original plan by doing nothing to come up with a new one."

"It is my personal conviction
